About this edition

This edition presents the complete Tattva, Bhagavat, Paramātma, Kṛṣṇa, Bhakti, and Prīti Sandarbhas in sequential Sanskrit and English witness blocks. The Sanskrit authority covers all 1,252 anucchedas. The web reader and this downloadable edition consume the same checksum-locked corpus.

Textual witnesses

The Sanskrit authority is GRETIL's complete TEI transcription; its Tattva portion includes Baladeva Vidyābhūṣaṇa's Ṭippaṇī. The English volumes are the freely distributed Kusakratha Dāsa Sandarbha library witnesses, with the Tattva translation and commentary credited in its source file to Gopīparāṇadhana Dāsa.

Numbering and coverage

The Bhagavat and Paramātma English editions end at sections 106 and 109, while the Sanskrit witness ends at 121 and 110. Several volumes combine adjacent headings. To preserve both editions honestly, every reading block identifies its independent Sanskrit and English ranges. Strict audits reconstruct both complete witnesses without omitted text.

All Glories To Sri Sri Radha-Govindadeva

SRI TATTVA-SANDARBHA

BY SRILA JIVA GOSWAMI

The first book of the Sri Bhagavata-sandarbha, the six books also known as Sri Sat-sandarbha, by 108 Srila Jiva Gosvami Prabhupada. Sri-krsno jayati All glories to Lord Sri Krsna!

krsna-varnam tvisakrsnam sangopangastra-parsadam yajïaih sankirtana-prayair yajanti hi su-medhasah “In the Age of Kali intelligent persons perform congregational chanting to worship the incarnation of Godhead who constantly sings the names of Krsna. Although His complexion is not blackish, He is Krsna Himself. He is accompanied by His associates, servants, weapons, and confidential companions” [Srimad-Bhagavatam 11.5.32].

COMMENTARY Invocation I natva krsnadasa-varyam prabhupadam tattvartha-dam bhasa-tikam karomy aham sri-vaisnavanam tustaye “After paying my obeisances to the best among Lord Krsna’s devotees, Srila Prabhupada, who has imparted knowledge about the essence of Vedic literature, I write this translation and COMMENTARY for the satisfaction of the Vaisnavas.” In the Vedic culture every undertaking begins with an invocation, technically called mangalacarana. The purpose is to invoke the blessings of the Supreme Personality of Godhead so He may remove any obstacle to the completion of the work. This book, Sri Sat-sandarbha, is a detailed treatise on the Lord’s name, fame, abode, qualities, pastimes, and associates. As such, it is already all-auspicious and thus needs no invocation. Srila Jiva Gosvami nonetheless performs mangalacarana, following in the footsteps of the previous acaryas and setting an ideal example for his readers. A book’s mangalacarana is of three types and may have one or more verses. The three types are: Namas-kriyatmaka: paying obeisances to one’s teacher(s) or worshipable deity, or to both. Asir-vadatmaka: praying to the Lord for His blessings, bestowing blessings upon the readers, or exclaiming “All glories to the Lord!” Vastu-nirdesatmaka: summarizing the subject matter of the book. Often the mangalacarana will also describe four essential elements of the book, called anubandha-catustaya: adhikari ca sambandho visayas ca prayojanam avasyam eva vaktavyam sastradau tu catustayam “At its beginning a book must describe these four items: the qualifications of the person who may read the book (adhikari), the connection between the book and its subject (sambandha), the subject itself (visaya or abhidheya), and what the reader will gain by reading the book and following the path it prescribes (prayojana).” In modern books these four items are usually covered in the introduction. It is significant that Srila Jiva Gosvami begins his mangalacarana with a quotation from Srimad-Bhagavatam and not with an original verse. By doing so he shows his reverence for Srimad-Bhagavatam and his surrender to the instructions of Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, for whom Srimad-Bhagavatam was the supreme scriptural authority. Srila Jiva Gosvami also implies that in the Sat-sandarbha he will analyze the Bhagavatam and establish its superiority over all other scriptures. In addition, this verse establishes that his worshipable Deity is Lord Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu. The opening verse was spoken by Karabhajana Rsi in response to a question Maharaja Nimi posed concerning the Lord’s color, name, and mode of worship in the various yugas. In this verse Karabhajana Rsi describes the Lord's incarnation in Kali-yuga, and in so doing he indirectly reveals that Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu is Lord Sri Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Krsna-varnam indicates one who describes the pastimes of Lord Krsna to others or who always chants "Krsna, Krsna." Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu certainly meets this criterion for being krsna-varna. Varnam also means "class" or "category." So krsna-varnam may also indicate one who is in the same class as Krsna. Sri Krsna Caitanya Mahaprabhu is krsna-varna in this sense because He is nondifferent from Lord Sri Krsna. Varna also means "letter" or "word," and thus krsna-varnam also indicates one whose name has the word Krsna in it—in this case Sri Krsna Caitanya. Other meanings of varna are "fame," "form," "outward appearance," "quality," and "ritual." One may apply all these meanings to the phrase krsna-varnam and thus understand it to indicate Sri Krsna Caitanya Mahaprabhu. For example, krsna-varnam may indicate one whose fame is like Krsna's or whose form is like Krsna's. In Sarva-samvadini, a supplementary COMMENTARY to Sri Sat-sandarbha by Srila Jiva Gosvami himself, he explains that Lord Caitanya is referred to as krsna-varna because people were reminded of Lord Sri Krsna just by seeing Him. Another reason is that although Sri Caitanya displayed a golden complexion to the common man, to His intimate associates He sometimes appeared blackish. Finally, krsna-varna also means one who is blackish like Krsna, but in the case of Lord Caitanya krsna-varna must refer to His inner complexion. This Srila Jiva Gosvami explains in the next Text. The compound word tvisakrsnam may be broken as tvisa akrsnam, giving the meaning "whose bodily hue is not blackish." In Srimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.13), Garga Muni tells Nanda Maharaja: asan varnas trayo hy asya grhnato 'nu-yugam tanuh suklo raktas tatha pita idanim krsnatam gatah "Your son Krsna appears as an incarnation in every millennium. In the past He assumed three different colors—white, red, and yellow—and now He has appeared in a blackish color." According to Srimad-Bhagavatam, the Supreme Personality of Godhead had a white complexion when He appeared in Satya-yuga, a reddish one in Treta-yuga, and a blackish one in Dvapara-yuga. So by the process of elimination the word akrsnam, "non-blackish," must indicate the incarnation with a yellow complexion—that is, the golden avatara, Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu. Garga Muni's mention of His yellow color "in previous yugas" may refer either to Lord Caitanya's previous appearances or to His future appearances, but Garga Muni uses the past tense because he is mentioning the yellow incarnation along with other incarnations who had appeared in the past. The usage is similar to what a person might say if he saw a householder and fifteen brahmacaris walking on the road: "The brahmacaris are coming." Yet another consideration is that Gargacarya may have used the past tense to hide Krsna's future incarnation as Lord Caitanya. Garga's purpose would have been to avoid confusing Nanda Maharaja and to play along with the Lord's plan to appear in Kali-yuga as the channa-avatara, or hidden incarnation. This last reason is why the Vedic scriptures only indirectly refer to Lord Caitanya's incarnation. In the Bhagavad-gita (7.25) Lord Krsna says, naham prakasah sarvasya yoga-maya-samavrtah: "Because the veil of Yogamaya covers Me, I am not manifest to everyone as I am." This declaration specifically applies to the Lord's appearance in Kali-yuga as Sri Krsna Caitanya. Prahlada Maharaja also refers to Lord Caitanya when he says in Srimad-Bhagavatam (7.9.38), channah kalau yad abhavas tri-yugo 'tha sa tvam: "O Lord, Your incarnation in Kali-yuga is hidden, or confidential, and therefore you are called Tri-yuga, one who incarnates in three yugas [namely Satya, Treta, and Dvapara]." Here the word channa ("covered") also signifies that Lord Caitanya is Lord Krsna covered by the mood and complexion of Sri Radhika. The Naradiya Purana (5.47) also foretells the Lord's appearance as a devotee: aham eva kalau vipra nityam pracchanna-vigrahah bhagavad-bhakta-rupena lokan raksami sarvada "The Lord said: 'Concealing My real identity, O vipra [Markandeya Rsi], I appear in Kali-yuga in the garb of a devotee and always protect My devotees.'" Tvisakrsnam may also be broken up as tvisa krsnam, meaning "one whose complexion is blackish." Although Lord Caitanya's complexion was golden, He is Lord Krsna Himself, and thus the words tvisa krsnam indicate His original form as Lord Krsna, which He revealed only to certain devotees, such as Sarvabhauma Bhattacarya. Sangopangastra-parsadam means "with His limbs, ornaments, weapons, and associates." According to Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana, Lord Caitanya's limbs are Lord Nityananda Prabhu and Advaita Acarya, His ornaments are Srivasa Thakura, Srila Haridasa Thakura, and others, His weapons are the holy names, which dispel ignorance, and His associates are Gadadhara, Govinda, and the many other devotees who stayed with Him in Jagannatha Puri. Sangopangastra-parsadam may also refer to Lord Caitanya's form as Sri Krsna, which He showed to His intimate devotees. This form has beautiful limbs decorated with ornaments (such as the Kaustubha gem), which act like weapons by attracting one's mind toward Lord Krsna and thus killing one's demoniac mentality. The Lord's ornaments are also associates of His, since they are living persons and are His devotees. The words yajïaih sankirtana-prayair yajanti hi su-medhasah convey the following meaning: The Vedas recommend many processes for worshiping the Supreme Lord, but in Kali-yuga the wise worship Him by chanting His holy names congregationally. Lord Caitanya inaugurated this process and is thus called the father of the sankirtana movement. Su-medhasah means "people of fine intelligence." The implication is that less intelligent people will worship the Lord in other ways and that outright fools will oppose the sankirtana movement. Sankirtana is very dear to Lord Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu. He Himself was always absorbed in performing sankirtana, and He enjoined everyone to participate, declaring it the universal remedy for all the defects of Kali-yuga. Sukadeva Gosvami confirms this in Srimad-Bhagavatam (12.3.51–52): kaler dosa-nidhe rajann asti hy eko mahan gunah kirtanad eva krsnasya mukta-sangah param vrajet krte yad dhyayato visnum tretayam yajato makhaih dvapare paricaryayam kalau tad dhari-kirtanat “My dear king, although Kali-yuga is an ocean of faults, there is still one good quality about this age: Simply by chanting the names of Krsna one can become free from material bondage and be promoted to the transcendental kingdom. Whatever result was obtained in Satya-yuga by meditating on Visnu, in Treta-yuga by performing sacrifices, and in Dvapara-yuga by serving the Lord’s lotus feet can be obtained in Kali-yuga simply by chanting the Hare Krsna maha-mantra.” Srila Jiva Gosvami’s worshipable Deity is Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu. Therefore Jiva Gosvami begins his topmost literary achievement by quoting a verse about Sri Caitanya from Srimad-Bhagavatam, the supreme scriptural authority for all time. This is a vastu-nirdesatmaka mangalacarana.

antah krsnam bahir gauram darsitangadi-vaibhavam kalau sankirtanadyaih smah krsna-caitanyam asritah In Kali-yuga we take shelter of Sri Krsna Caitanya by chanting the Lord’s holy names congregationally and engaging in other devotional practices. He is blackish within but golden without, and He has revealed to everyone the opulences of His beautiful bodily limbs and other features.

COMMENTARY Invocation II Here Srila Jiva Gosvami explains the meaning of the opening verse. Lord Krsna, whose complexion is blackish, covered Himself with the golden complexion of Srimati Radharani to appear in Kali-yuga as Krsna Caitanya. He is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, but His purpose is to show us how to be devotees of the Lord. For this reason it is not readily apparent that He is the Supreme Lord, and so Srimad-Bhagavatam describes Him as “the hidden incarnation.” Or, alternatively, the words antah krsnam bahir gauram here may be taken to mean not that Lord Caitanya is blackish within and golden without but that He is Krsna within though outwardly appearing as Gaura, Caitanya Mahaprabhu. Srila Jiva Gosvami also indicates here that one can please Lord Krsna Caitanya by chanting the Hare Krsna maha-mantra. Darsitangadi-vaibhavam means that Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu manifested His opulence through His limbs and associates. His body was so beautiful that just by seeing Him people would be inspired to surrender to Him. He also manifested His supremacy through Nityananda Prabhu and other associates who preached the chanting of the holy name. This phrase can also mean that Lord Caitanya manifested the 'greatness of his associates by engaging them in distributing love of Godhead. By using the plural form "we" in the phrase "we take shelter of Sri Krsna Caitanya," Srila Jiva Gosvami includes the readers of Sri Sat-sandarbha. He invites them to join him in taking shelter of Lord Caitanya by participating in the sankirtana movement, the universal process for pleasing the Supreme Lord and attaining deliverance. By using the plural Sri Jiva also implies that Lord Caitanya's teachings are not limited to a particular sect or nationality. So far Srila Jiva Gosvami has described his worshipable Deity. Next he performs asir-vadatmaka-mangalacarana, invoking auspiciousness by declaring the glories of his spiritual masters.

jayatam mathura-bhumau Srila-rupa-sanatanau yau vilekhayatas tattvam jïapakau pustikam imam All glories to Srila Rupa Gosvami and Srila Sanatana Gosvami in the land of Mathura! They have engaged me in writing this book to broadcast the essential truth about the Supreme Lord.

COMMENTARY Invocaton III Here Srila Jiva Gosvami explains his reason for composing the Sat-sandarbha. He is doing so at the behest of his spiritual masters, Rupa and Sanatana Gosvamis, who are also his uncles. Jiva Gosvami studied under them, and they asked him to compile their teachings into a book for the benefit of all. This request is indicated by the word jïapakau, which literally means “those who like to teach others.” Previously Srila Rupa and Srila Sanatana were glorious in Bengal as ministers of Hussein Shah. Now they are glorious in the land of Mathura, which is itself glorious, being the place of Lord Krsna’s pastimes. To be glorious in this land means to have the wealth of krsna-prema, love of Godhead, which is the most rare possession. To show this achievement Jiva Gosvami adds the honorofic “Srila” before their names. “Srila” signifies that Rupa and Sanatana Gosvamis are endowed with transcendental knowledge, renunciation, devotional service, and love of God. Srila Jiva Gosvami prays that through the Sat-sandarbha these two great souls may manifest their opulence and glory for the welfare of others. According to Sanskrit grammatical rules, the pronoun imam (“this”) is used for objects near at hand. Since at this point Jiva Gosvami is in the process of writing the Sat-sandarbha, his mention here of pustikam imam (“this book”) may seem a defect. Baladeva Vidyabhusana comments, however, that because the book already exists within the author’s mind, his usage is proper.

ko 'pi tad-bandhavo bhatto daksina-dvija-vamsa-jah vivicya vyalikhad grantham likhitad vrddha-vaisnavaih Sri Gopala Bhatta Gosvami, a friend of Sri Rupa's and Sri Sanatana's born in a South Indian brahmana family, compiled the original version of this book based on the works of venerable Vaisnavas.

COMMENTARY The Source of Sri Sat-sandarbha Srila Gopala Bhatta Gosvami was the son of Venkata Bhatta, the head priest of the temple of Lord Ranganatha at Sri Rangam, where the Sri-vaisnava sect has its headquarters. It was in Venkata's home that Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu stayed for the four months of the rainy season during His tour of South India. There He and Venkata discussed philosophy, as is known from the Caitanya-caritamrta, Madhya-lila, chapter nine, and the Bhakti-ratnakara, first wave. At that time Gopala Bhatta was a young boy, and he learned the intricacies of Gaudiya-vaisnava philosophy directly from Sri Caitanya. Later he studied the writings of the eminent Vaisnavas of the Sri-sampradaya. On Lord Caitanya's order Gopala Bhatta later moved to Vrndavana, where he established the temple of Sri Radha-ramana. He is one of the great authorities on Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu's teachings. As we shall learn further on, the venerable Vaisnavas Srila Jiva Gosvami refers to here as sources for Srila Gopala Bhatta Gosvami include Sri Ramanujacarya, Sri Madhvacarya, and Sridhara Svami. Srila Gopala Bhatta Gosvami culled the essence from the works of these previous acaryas and Vaisnava scholars and then composed a book explaining the essential truths about Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. That book is the basis for the present work. In this way Jiva Gosvami hints at the authenticity of his work, for by basing it on Srila Gopala Bhatta Gosvami's book he implies that the work is authoritative, free of concocted ideas.

tasyadyam granthanalekham kranta-vyutkranta-khanditam paryalocyatha paryayam krtva likhati jivakah Some parts of this first book by Gopala Bhatta Gosvami were in correct sequence, and some were not. Some parts were incomplete or lost. Now, after careful study, Jiva is rewriting this book in the proper sequence.

COMMENTARY Homage to Sri Gopala Bhatta Gosvami The following question may arise: If Gopala Bhatta Gosvami had already composed a work on this subject, why should Rupa and Sanatana have engaged Jiva Gosvami in compiling a similar work? Jiva Gosvami replies in this verse: His mission is to complete the task that Gopala Bhatta Gosvami began and to set the material in proper order. In the previous two verses Jiva Gosvami has already established that his work is not a product of his imagination but is based on the authority of the scriptures and previous acaryas. By using the word jivaka, Jiva Gosvami makes a pun on his name. Jivaka means "a petty soul," or else it can be taken as the name of the author. Out of humility the author refers to himself here in the third person. The suffix kan is used in this con TEXT in a diminutive sense, to indicate that a humble soul is writing. As jivanugas, or followers of Srila Jiva Gosvami, we may prefer to interpret jivaka in other ways. We may, for example, apply the definition jivan kapayati bhagavatartha-pradanandeneti jivakah: “One who makes the living beings emit ecstatic sounds by supplying them with the esoteric meaning of Srimad-Bhagavatam [through his Bhagavata-sandarbha] is jivaka.” Or, alternatively, jiva-svarupa-sambandhabhidheya-prayojanan kayati varnayatiti jivakah: “One who explains the nature of the jiva, his relation with the Lord, the process by which he can achieve the ultimate goal of life, and also that ultimate goal—such a person is jivaka.” Or, jivayati jivan krsna-prema-pradaneneti jivo, jiva eva jivaka iti svarthe kan: “One who infuses life into living beings by giving them love of Krsna is jiva or, equivalently, jivaka.” Finally, the word jivaka may also be formed by applying to the root jiv the suffix -aka in the sense of “blessing.” In this case jivaka means “the person who confers blessings on the living entities.”

yah Sri-krsna-padambhoja- bhajanaikabhilasa-van tenaiva drsyatam etad anyasmai sapatho ’rpitah This book may be studied only by one whose sole desire is to serve the lotus feet of Lord Sri Krsna. I warn everyone else not to read it.

COMMENTARY Qualifications of the Reader Here Srila Jiva Gosvami defines the adhikari, the person qualified to read Sri Sat-sandarbha. Sri Jiva is writing only for those whose sole desire is to serve Lord Krsna. He bars all others from reading this work. What prompts him to do so is not fear that critics will find defects in his work; since he is working under the order and supervision of learned Vaisnavas, namely Rupa Gosvami and Sanatana Gosvami, and since all his statements will be based on scripture, there is no question of defects. Rather, it is out of compassion that Jiva Gosvami says that the Sat-sandarbha "may be studied only by one whose sole desire is to serve the lotus feet of Lord Sri Krsna." His intention is to prohibit those who have no desire to engage in devotional service from reading his book. In the Sat-sandarbha he intends to establish the glories of the Supreme Personality of Godhead with great logic and force and with scriptural reference. Such a book will displease those who have no desire to be devoted to the Supreme Lord, since they cannot tolerate His glorification. If such persons happen to read this book, they may become offensive toward the Lord and His devotees and thus bring hellish miseries upon themselves. For their benefit, therefore, Sri Jiva pens this statement forbidding them to read Sri Sat-sandarbha. In the Bhagavad-gita (18.67), Lord Krsna imposes a similar restriction on Arjuna: idam te natapaskaya nabhaktaya kadacana na casusrusave vacyam na ca mam yo 'bhyasuyati "This confidential knowledge may never be explained to those who are not austere, or devoted, or engaged in devotional service, nor to one who is envious of Me." In this TEXT the word eka ("only") significantly means that even among those desiring to render service to Lord Krsna, none should harbor personal ambition in his heart and misuse Sri Sat-sandarbha for gaining profit, adoration, and distinction. Finally, here Srila Jiva Gosvami indicates indirectly that in Sri Sat-sandarbha he will establish service to Lord Krsna as the supreme goal of life.

atha natva mantra-gurun gurun bhagavatartha-dan Sri-bhagavata-sandarbham sandarbham vasmi lekhitum After offering obeisances to my initiating spiritual master and to those spiritual masters who taught me the meaning of Srimad-Bhagavatam, I wish to write this book called Sri Bhagavata-sandarbha.

COMMENTARY Homage to the Teachers After showing reverence to his teachers, Srila Jiva Gosvami names his book in this verse. He calls it Sri Bhagavata-sandarbha because in it he will explain the essential meanings of the Bhagavata Purana (Srimad-Bhagavatam). To explain the term sandarbha, in his COMMENTARY on this TEXT Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana quotes a well-known verse of unknown origin: gudharthasya prakasas ca saroktih sresthata tatha nanartha-vatvam vedyatvam sandarbhah kathyate budhaih “A literary work that explains the confidential aspects of a subject, incorporates its essence, explains the superiority of the subject, gives its various meanings, and is worth learning is called a sandarbha by learned scholars.” The Bhagavata-sandarbha is also called the Sat-sandarbha because it contains six books, the Tattva-, Bhagavat-, Paramatma-, Krsna-, Bhakti-, and Priti-sandarbhas. Each Sandarbha is an analysis of the subject stated in its title, and each is based on Srimad-Bhagavatam. Srila Jiva Gosvami also wrote a verse-by-verse COMMENTARY on Srimad-Bhagavatam called the Krama-sandarbha, and this is sometimes referred to as the seventh Sandarbha. Both Vaisnavas and others have written many essays and treatises on Srimad-Bhagavatam, but among all of them these six works stand as the most exhaustive exposition of the Bhagavata philosophy. His Divine Grace A. C. Bhaktivedanta Swami Prabhupada joined the other acaryas coming in succession after Srila Jiva Gosvami in praising him as the greatest Vaisnava philosopher of all time. Srila Prabhupada called Sri Sat-sandarbha “the last word on the teachings of Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu.” Thus it is clear that Srila Jiva Gosvami is perfectly justified in giving the title sandarbha to his work. In the next Text, while giving blessings to his readers, Jiva Gosvami indirectly explains the subject matter of the Sat-sandarbha, the process presented in the book by which one can attain the goal, and the goal itself.

In another feature He expands as the Purusa, who controls the external potency, Maya, by His many plenary portions. In yet another of His principal forms He is present as Narayana in the spiritual sky, Vaikuntha. May that Lord Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, bestow love for Himself on those who worship His lotus feet in this world.

COMMENTARY The Essence of Sri Sat-sandarbha Although one without a second, Lord Sri Krsna has limitless expansions. His feature that manifests as dazzling effulgence, without form, qualities, or opulences, is called Brahman in some sections of the Vedas. Some transcendentalists worship this undivided, formless aspect of the Absolute, considering it the ultimate reality. For such persons the Absolute Truth, Lord Krsna, appears as impersonal Brahman. This feature of the Lord is described in the Taittiriya Upanisad (2.1.1): satyam jïanam anantam brahma. “Brahman is eternal, conscious, and unlimited.” Another aspect of Lord Krsna is His controlling feature called the Purusa. There are three such Purusa expansions. The first is Karanodakasayi Visnu, who lies in the Causal Ocean and is the Supersoul of the entire material creation. The Lord has only one Karanodakasayi Visnu expansion, also called Maha-Visnu. He activates the material energy with His glance. The second Purusa is Garbhodakasayi Visnu, the Supersoul expansion within each of the innumerable universes. He is the source of the various lila-avataras, the Supreme Lord's pastime incarnations, who appear in the various universes. The Supreme Lord delegates the responsibility for creating each universe to one of the innumerable Brahmas, each of whom is born from the lotus flower growing from Garbhodakasayi Visnu's lotus navel. The third Purusa is Ksirodakasayi Visnu, who expands as the Supersoul in all life forms, and indeed in every atom. These three Purusavataras are also called Sankarsana, Pradyumna, and Aniruddha, respectively. Krsna controls the material nature through the agency of His Purusa incarnations. A summary description of these three Purusa manifestations is given in the Satvata-tantra (cited by Rupa Gosvami in his Laghu-bhagavatamrta 1.25): visnos tu trini rupani purusakhyany atho viduh ekam tu mahatah srastr dvitiyam tv anda-samsthitam trtiyam sarva-bhuta-stham tani jïatva vimucyate "Lord Visnu has three forms called Purusas. The first is Maha-Visnu, who is the creator of the total material energy [mahat], the second is Garbhodakasayi Visnu, who is situated within each universe, and the third is Ksirodakasayi, who lives in the heart of every living being. He who knows these three becomes liberated from the clutches of Maya." Beyond the material creation is the spiritual sky (para-vyoma), which contains the various spiritual planets, called Vaikunthas. The chief Deity in the spiritual sky is Lord Narayana, a vilasa expansion of Lord Sri Krsna. The Laghu-bhagavatamrta (1.15) defines a vilasa form as follows:

svarupam anyakaram yat tasya bhati vilasatah prayenatma-samam saktya sa vilaso nigadyate "When the Lord expands into a form that appears different from His original form but has almost all His original qualities, that form is called a vilasa expansion." Lord Krsna in His two-handed form is svayam bhagavan, the original Personality of Godhead. This svayam-rupa is described in the Laghu-bhagavatamrta (1.12): ananyapeksi yad rupam svayam-rupah sa ucyate. "That form of the Supreme Lord which is not a dependent expansion of some other form is called svayam-rupa, a 'self-sufficient form.'" The Lord's svayam-rupa is grounded in itself and is the basis of all other forms. It is completely independent, second to no other form. In Sri Krsna-sandarbha Srila Jiva Gosvami will explain all this in greater detail. Here he briefly describes the essence of Srimad-Bhagavatam, giving us a seed that he will cultivate until it gradually grows into the tree of Sri Bhagavata-sandarbha. Words have an integral relationship with their meaning, or reference, and in Sanskrit linguistics this relationship is called vacya-vacaka-sambandha. Similarly, a book has an integral relationship with its subject through the meanings of the words that constitute it. In the present TEXT the phrase sa krsnah indicates that svayam bhagavan, Lord Sri Krsna, is the subject (visaya) of the Sat-sandarbha. By this phrase Srila Jiva Gosvami establishes the vacya-vacaka-sambandha between his book and the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Sri Krsna. The process (abhidheya) for realizing Lord Sri Krsna is devotional service to His lotus feet, a fact indicated by the words tat-pada-bhajam. The purpose (prayojana) of this process is to attain love of Godhead, indicated by the word prema. In this way Srila Jiva Gosvami here alludes to the four introductory topics mentioned in TEXT 1: the subject of the book, the book's relationship with the subject, the process of achieving the final purpose, and the final purpose itself. In the next TEXT he explicitly states these four and explains the means of acquiring valid knowledge about them.

athaivam sucitanam Sri-krsna-tad-vacya-vacakata-laksana-sambandha-tad-bhajana-laksana-vidheya-saparyayabhidheya-tat-prema-laksana-prayojanakhyanam arthanam nirnayaya tavat pramanam nirniyate. tatra purusasya bhramadi-dosa-catustaya-dustatvat sutaram alaukikacintya-svabhava-vastu-sparsayogyatvac ca tat-pratyaksadiny api sa-dosani. Four topics were suggested in the previous Text: Sri Krsna as the subject (visaya), the connection between Him and the words describing Him (sambandha), service to Him as the recommended process to be performed (abhidheya or vidheya), and pure love for Him as the final purpose (prayojana). Now, to understand these topics we should first determine the means of acquiring valid knowledge. Human beings are bound to have four defects: They are subject to delusion, make mistakes, tend to cheat, and have imperfect senses. Thus their direct perception, inference, and so forth are deficient, especially since these means of knowing cannot help them gain access to the inconceivable spiritual reality.

COMMENTARY Vaisnava Epistemology Without knowing the purpose of a book, a prospective reader is unlikely to take a keen interest in it, so in the previous TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami outlines his subject and purpose. Now, with the phrase tad-bhajana-laksana-vidheya, he states that devotional service as explained in the Vedic scriptures is the process for achieving the final goal, prema-bhakti. But before one practices any important process he should have correct knowledge about it. Thus the need arises for discerning the various means of acquiring valid knowledge. This portion of Tattva-sandarbha therefore deals with Vaisnava epistemology. Jiva Gosvami first establishes the validity of his means of acquiring knowledge before analyzing the four topics mentioned in the previous Text. In English the word “knowledge” means valid knowledge. In Sanskrit, valid knowledge is called prama, and a means of acquiring it is called pramana. Sometimes the word pramana is used to mean “proof,” “evidence,” or “authority.” Jiva Gosvami is concerned with establishing an infallible means of acquiring knowledge. Ordinary human beings use various means to acquire knowledge, but none of these is infallible. This fallibility is due to the four inherent defects found in all ordinary humans. Without exception every ordinary human being has the tendency to be deluded (bhrama), makes mistakes (pramada), has a cheating propensity (vipralipsa), and has imperfect senses (karanapatava). Bhrama, or mistaken identification, is of two kinds. The first is identification of the body as the self. Everyone is born with this delusion, but how completely we identify with our body depends on our attachment to it. Because of this defect we mistake the temporary, miserable sense objects as permanent sources of pleasure. The second kind of mistaken identification occurs when we think we perceive something that in fact is not present, as in the case of a mirage or hallucination. Pramada, the second of the four defects, is our tendency to become deluded because of inattention. If our mind is not connecting with a particular perceiving sense—the eyes, ears, nose, tongue, or skin—we do not get the knowledge it can supply. For example, we may sit through a lecture but miss portions of it because our mind is wandering. The third defect is vipralipsa, the propensity to cheat. Material conditioning causes us to consider ourselves the material body, which, being temporary, can never give us real happiness. But still out of delusion we seek happiness through sense gratification. When we fail to obtain this to our full satisfaction, we take to cheating to improve our chances. Friends cheat friends, politicians cheat the public, and so on. Even in spiritual life a so-called guru will cheat his disciple by teaching some materialistic philosophy as the absolute truth, or an insincere disciple will try to cheat his guru by transgressing the guru's orders while pretending to follow them. This cheating propensity manifests on all levels of material existence. The last of the four defects is karanapatava, imperfect senses. We have five perceptive senses—the eyes, ears, tongue, nose, and skin. Each of these functions only within a limited range. The human eye, for instance, can see light between infrared and ultraviolet wavelengths, but there are many other wavelengths the eye cannot discern—radio waves, x-rays, and so on. Even within the visible range our eyes cannot see clearly if the light is too bright or too dim, if the object is too far or too close, or if the eyes themselves are diseased. Upon analysis, each sense will reveal a similar built-in limitation. The conclusion is that since these four defects make perfectly reliable knowledge about material objects a rare achievement, perfect knowledge about the transcendental realm is altogether impossible by the means we commonly accept. This premise is the cornerstone of Vedic epistemology. Of course, by acknowledging these four defects one will find the quest for a reliable pramana to be an exacting challenge. Among India's philosophical traditions there are a total of ten pramanas, or means of acquiring valid knowledge. Each philosophical school recognizes a certain combination of these as valid and may present arguments to support its opinion. These ten traditional pramanas, with the three most important ones listed last, are as follows: 1. Arsa: the statements of an authoritative sage or demigod. There are many exceptional sages, such as Kapila, Gautama, and Pataïjali, who founded their own schools of philosophy. Naturally these authorities' opinions differ, and therefore the Mahabharata (Vana-parva 313.117) says, nasav rsir yasya matam na bhinnam: "One is not considered a philosopher if his opinion does not differ from the opinions of other philosophers." Since these philosophers are all profound thinkers, we take their utterances seriously, but an ordinary person can hardly determine which philosopher's opinion is correct. For Vaisnavas, the criterion for judging whether a particular arsa opinion is valid is whether it conforms to the principal pramanas. 2. Upamana: comparison. We can identify something about which we have no prior knowledge after it has been compared to a familiar object. Suppose we have seen an ordinary cow but never a gavaya (forest cow), and someone tells us that a gavaya resembles a cow. Then we may recognize a gavaya when we see one. 3. Arthapatti: presumption. By this means we assume an unknown fact or facts to account for some known fact or facts that are otherwise inexplicable. For example, if we know that fat Devadatta does not eat during the day, we can safely assume he must eat at night. Otherwise his stoutness is inexplicable. 4. Abhava: absence. Failing to perceive an object by means of a suitable sense is considered perception of the absence of that object. For example, a book is a suitable object for visual perception, and the eyes constitute the suitable instrument for this perception. Thus when one does not see a book on a table, one is experiencing the book's absence. Such abhava is classified as a separate category of perception because in it there is no actual contact between the object and the sense instrument, as there would be in ordinary sensory perception. What is perceived is the object's absence. 5. Sambhava: inclusion. This pramana is based on our common experience that a larger quantity includes some smaller quantity. For example, if we know someone possesses a hundred dollars, we automatically know he possesses one dollar, five dollars, ten dollars, and so on. This kind of reasoning, based on the principle of inclusion, is called sambhava. 6. Aitihya: tradition. This pramana is applied when some accepted fact is known by common belief or tradition but the original source of that knowledge is unknown. For instance, there is a popular belief that the Pandavas built the Old Fort in what is now New Delhi. There is no written proof or scriptural authority to support this belief, but it has been passed down for generations to the present day and is nearly universally accepted as corresponding to fact. 7. Cesta: gesture. This pramana comes into play when one learns something from a knowledgeable person's gestures or from symbols. For instance, we may make a "V" sign with our fingers to indicate victory, or a pujari may show the Deity mudras to convey certain messages. 8. Pratyaksa: direct perception. Directly perceiving something with our senses can be the means to either valid or invalid knowledge. But only that sense perception which leads to valid knowledge should be considered pramana. Sense perception is the principal means of acquiring knowledge in this material world. Both theistic and atheistic philosophers accept pratyaksa-pramana as one of the means to valid knowledge. Direct perception is of two types—external and internal. An external perception occurs when we acquire knowledge through the senses. In an internal perception we acquire knowledge directly through the mind, as when we perceive emotions such as pain, pleasure, love, and hate. In the Bhagavad-gita (15.7) Lord Krsna lists the mind as the sixth sense (manah-sasthanindriyani). Because of our four inherent human defects, pratyaksa is not always a reliable means with which to acquire valid knowledge. For one thing, its scope is limited only to the present, since it cannot extend into the past or future. Moreover, it is limited only to material things. According to Srila Jiva Gosvami, however, perfect devotees who achieve direct perception of the Lord, His abode, and His associates through spiritual trance all have pure senses and have transcended the four defects. For such persons pratyaksa is a reliable source of knowledge because their sense perception is completely pure. Lord Krsna confirms this in the Ninth

Chapter of the Bhagavad-gita (9.2) when He says that "this knowledge leads to direct realization of transcendence by experience (pratyaksavagamam)." And in the sixth chapter (Bg. 6.21) the Lord likewise assures Arjuna that in the state of transcendental trance, samadhi, a devotee acquires perfect knowledge through his purified intelligence and transcendental senses (buddhi-grahyam atindriyam vetti). This experience of pure Vaisnavas is called vaidusa-pratyaksa, and it is flawless. 9. Anumana: inference based on generalized experience. The word anumana literally means "knowing after." Based on repeated experience or authoritative verbal testimony, one arrives at some probable general principle, called vyapti ("invariable concomitance"). One can then apply this principle in specific cases to deduce unknown facts. Inference is of two kinds, for oneself and for others. An example of inference for oneself, which is less formal, is the process of reasoning a person goes through when he repeatedly sees, in the kitchen and elsewhere, the concomitance between smoke and fire and arrives at the general principle "Wherever there's smoke, there's fire." Then if he sees smoke hanging over a mountain in the distance, he may recall the principle and conclude, "There is a fire on the mountain." Inference for others uses a five-step syllogistic formula. After arriving at an inferred conclusion for himself, a person uses this method to enable others to infer the same conclusion. The syllogistic format is as follows: 1. Proposition: There is a fire on the mountain. 2. Reason: Because there's smoke. 3. General principle and example: Wherever there's smoke, there's fire, as in the kitchen. 4. Application: There is smoke over the mountain. 5. Conclusion: Therefore there is a fire on the mountain. If there is any error in perceiving the reason or any deviation in the universal generalization, the inference will be faulty and its conclusion unreliable. In the above example, if the observer mistakes clouds over the mountain for smoke or sees the smoke just after rain has extinguished the fire, his deduction that a fire is burning on the mountain will be wrong. Like pratyaksa, therefore, anumana is not a foolproof means of acquiring knowledge. 10. Sabda: revealed knowledge. Sabda literally means sound, but as a pramana it refers to articulate, meaningful sound spoken or written by an apta-purusa, a trustworthy person who is an authority on the matter in question. In its ultimate sense the term sabda refers to revealed knowledge that concerns the transcendental reality and that has come from reliable authorities free from the four human defects. This kind of sabda differs from the language used in mundane transactions, which is called pauruseya-sabda and is not always reliable. For Srila Jiva Gosvami, sabda-pramana is restricted to the revealed knowledge of the Vedas. It is called apauruseya-sabda, revealed knowledge from a superhuman source. It originated with the Supreme Personality of Godhead and is received in disciplic succession from a bona fide guru. Apauruseya-sabda is therefore the perfect pramana because it is free from the four defects. At present, people who fail to accept the authority of apauruseya-sabda-pramana generally fall into two groups: those in the first group doubt the very existence of a transcendental reality beyond the empirical world; those in the second group accept the existence of such a reality, and may even accept the principle of hearing from apauruseya-sabda-pramana as a means of knowing about it, but unfortunately they also accept one or more pauruseya sources of sabda-pramana as apauruseya. Members of the first group usually favor knowledge gained through their own sensory experience. Yet like everyone else they constantly rely on knowledge imparted to them through sound. In our practical day-to-day life we depend on knowledge transmitted from parents, teachers, books, magazines, TV, radio, and numerous experts. Hearing from authorities enhances the extent of our learning, and if we were to dispense with it we could not function in our complex modern society. Those who consider sensory experience superior to sabda forget that we gain most of our knowledge by hearing second hand or reading, not by immediate perception. Direct experience is a great teacher, but it is nonetheless severely vitiated by the four human defects, and also by the great expenditure of time it takes to acquire it. Moreover, we cannot directly experience past or future events. So even though those in the first group actually accept the principle of sabda, because the sabda they accept imparts to them only empirical knowledge and is therefore all pauruseya, they remain skeptical about the existence of transcendental reality. Ultimately, no amount of raw sensory experience or pauruseya-sabda can ever give us access to the transcendent, spiritual reality, for it is a simple fact that neither of these means is at all reliable for understanding transcendence. For that, apauruseya-sabda-pramana is our only hope. This brings us to the second group—those who accept both the existence of a transcendental reality and the principle of hearing from apauruseya-sabda-pramana to learn about it. For them, Srila Jiva Gosvami elaborately explains in the next Texts what constitutes genuine apauruseya-sabda-pramana. Unlike pratyaksa, sabda is not limited in scope only to the present time. It extends into the past and future as well. It is the most powerful tool for conveying knowledge from one person to another, especially if they are greatly separated by time or space, which is almost always the case when one wants to understand the spiritual realm. For all these reasons philosophers in virtually all of India's orthodox traditions accept apauruseya-sabda-pramana as the flawless means for acquiring transcendental knowledge. Like other followers of India's orthodox philosophical traditions, Srila Jiva Gosvami ssanequates sabda-pramana with the Vedas. The Vedas alone can deliver knowledge of the spiritual reality, which lies beyond all our sensory perception. As explained in the next Text, the Vedas are not human creations: they are manifest from the Supreme Lord (vedo narayanah saksat; Bhag. 6.1.40), who is free from all defects. In his Sarva-samvadini, while discussing the principle of sabda-pramana, Srila Jiva Gosvami writes: tathapi bhrama-pramada-vipralipsa-karanapatava-dosa-rahita-vacanatmakah sabda eva mulam pramanam. anyesam prayah purusa-bhramadi-dosa-mayatayanyatha-pratiti-darsanena pramanam va tad-abhaso veti purusair nirnetum asakyatvat tasya tad-abhavat. Although there are ten means of acquiring knowledge, sabda is the primary process because all other means are made unreliable by the four human defects. In all other processes it is difficult for an ordinary person to tell whether or not the knowledge gained is valid. Although different schools of philosophy accept various combinations of the ten pramanas, Srila Jiva Gosvami follows in the footsteps of Madhvacarya by accepting pratyaksa (direct perception), anumana (inference) and sabda (revealed knowledge) as the only valid means by which one can acquire knowledge and by subsuming the other pramanas under them. Pratyaksa and anumana can serve as assistants to sabda, but whenever pratyaksa and anumana contradict sabda, we should give preference to sabda-pramana. Here are some scriptural references showing the importance of these three pramanas: pratyaksam canumanam ca sastram ca vividhagamam trayam su-viditam karyam dharma-suddhim abhipsata “A person serious about executing the responsibilities of human life should try to understand the three processes of direct perception, inference, and hearing the various Vedic scriptures”(Manu-samhita 12.105). pratyaksenanumanena nigamenatma-samvida ady-anta-vad asaj jïatva nihsango vicared iha “[Lord Krsna said:] ‘By direct perception, logical deduction, scriptural testimony and personal realization one should know that this world has a beginning and an end and so is not the ultimate reality. Thus one should live in this world without attachment’” (Bhag. 11.28.9). In Srimad-Bhagavatam (11.19.17) Lord Krsna includes aitihya (tradition) with sense perception, inference, and sabda as a means of acquiring knowledge, but in fact aitihya is usually considered a kind of sabda, although not necessarily apauruseya-sabda. By accepting only three of the ten pramanas, Jiva Gosvami does not exclude the other seven. His opinion is that pratyaksa, anumana, and sabda include the other seven pramanas, as follows: Upamana, arthapatti, sambhava, and cesta are varieties of anumana; abhava is a kind of pratyaksa; and arsa and aitihya are kinds of sabda. Next Srila Jiva Gosvami explains what process is suitable for determining the visaya (the subject), the sambandha (the connection between the visaya and the words describing it), and the prayojana (the final goal).

tatas tani na pramananity anadi-siddha-sarva-purusa-paramparasu sarva-laukikalaukika-jïana-nidanatvad aprakrta-vacana-laksano veda evasmakam sarvatita-sarvasraya-sarvacintyascarya-svabhavam vastu vividisatam pramanam. Consequently, for us who are inquisitive about that which is beyond everything yet the support of everything—that which is most inconceivable and wondrous in nature—direct perception, inference, and so on are not suitable means of gaining knowledge. For this purpose the only suitable means is the Vedas, the transcendental words that have been the source of all mundane and spiritual knowledge passed down among all schools of thought in human society since time immemorial.

COMMENTARY The Vedas Are the Original Source of Knowledge As already noted, direct perception and inference depend on sense perception, which is limited only to empirical objects and vitiated by the four human defects. Thus direct perception and inference are inadequate by themselves for completely understanding anything beyond our senses. By tracing the chain of causes in material creation, we can infer that something exists beyond our sense perception, but inference can take us no further, leaving us unable to identify it; nor can inference yield valid knowledge about abhidheya, the process for realizing it. We can acquire such knowledge only from revealed scripture, the Vedas, which are not the creations of mortal beings and so are free from the four defects of human nature. The Vedas appeared from the Supreme Lord at the dawn of creation, a fact confirmed in the Svetasvatara Upanisad (6.8): yo brahmanam vidadhati purvam yo vai vedams ca prahinoti tasmai. "That Supreme Lord created Brahma at the beginning of creation and gave him the Vedas." The term anadi-siddha, as used in this Text, means that the Vedas were not written at a particular date but exist eternally, like the Lord. They first manifested in this universe within the heart of Lord Brahma, the oldest created being: tene brahma hrda ya adi-kavaye (Bhag. 1.1.1); then they were handed down through disciplic succession. The Vedas provide both material and spiritual knowledge. Knowledge about such common phenomena as the trees, water, land, and sky originally came from the Vedas, along with the knowledge of the divisions of duties for various people according to their psycho-physical natures. As the Manu-samhita (1.21) states: sarvesam tu sa namani karmani ca prthak prthak veda-sabdebhya evadau prthak-samsthas ca nirmame "Lord Brahma learned the names of various objects and the duties of various classes of people from the words of the Vedas, and thus he could propagate the manifest divisions of names and duties." Over time, there developed different cultures and languages that obscured the original Vedic culture. For acquiring transcendental knowledge, the Vedas (sabda-pramana) is the only effective means. The Vedas inform us about the soul's existence beyond the body, about the planets of the spiritual world, and about the Supreme Lord, His pastimes, and other matters. All these subjects are beyond the reach of our sensory and mental faculties. Without the method of sabda, such philosophers as the Buddhists who do not accept the Vedas cannot justifiably say anything positive about transcendence, let alone the way to attain it. Sabda-pramana is so important that although Vaisnavas count Lord Buddha among the incarnations of the Lord on the strength of Vedic testimony, they reject His philosophy because it was not based on sabda-pramana. All orthodox schools of philosophy in India, whether monistic or dualistic, consider the Vedas apauruseya, not written by any mortal being. Many modern scholars, however, dispute the divine origin of the Vedas. They suggest various dates for the composition of the Vedas, and while most of them agree that the Vedas were composed before 1500 B.C., they disagree about the exact time of their composition. They have yet to arrive at a definitive conclusion. Here Srila Jiva Gosvami says that the Vedas are beginningless and are the source of various kinds of knowledge coming down through many schools of thought since time immemorial. The phrase sarva-purusa, “all persons” indicates that the knowledge was passed on not only by human beings but also by superhuman beings, such as the demigods and divine sages. These traditions of thought all originate with the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is infallible in all respects and thus completely untainted by the four human defects. Moreover, Srila Jiva Gosvami has already shown (in TEXT 9) how unreliable are the alternatives to the Vedic authority. If, as he has established, only apauruseya-sabda can give access to transcendental reality, how could the Vedas then have been written or compiled by human beings? If Jiva Gosvami allowed that human authors composed the Vedas, he would be contradicting his own previous dismissal of human knowledge as imperfect. Those scholars who contest the apauruseya origin of the Vedas, claiming that they are human compilations, have no conclusive proof to back up their claim. Refusing to consider the Vedas' own statements about their origin and purpose, these scholars merely assume that the Vedas are not authoritative and speculate about their true origin. Their motive is clear, for accepting the Vedic version would put an end to the speculative philosophical tradition; it would oblige them to accept the Vedic description of ultimate reality. However, on account of being too attached to the speculative, or ascending, method of knowledge, such scholars and philosophers rather insist that the Vedas are of human origin, regardless of their inability to produce any proof of their claim. Indeed, the theory of the Vedas having a human author is a recent development advocated by persons who did not come in disciplic succession. They were mostly outsiders who refused to believe that India had much of importance to offer the world in the realm of philosophy and who had their own motives for minimizing the Vedic traditions. They certainly were not impartial judges of the Vedas' origin. On the other side, great scholars and saints like Sankaracarya, Madhvacarya, Ramanujacarya, Kumarila Bhatta, and Rupa Gosvami all accepted the Vedas as apauruseya and eternal. These exalted authorities are famed for their renunciation, knowledge, and selflessness. Contemporary mundane scholars who contest the divine origin of the Vedas naturally fail to place their faith in the opinions of these authorities, but, as we have pointed out, such materialistic scholars are not free from ulterior motives, nor do their character and conduct compare favorably with those of the great acaryas. Another consideration, and an important one, is that the Vedas themselves repeatedly enjoin that one who wants to understand the spiritual knowledge they teach must first approach a guru in disciplic succession. Vedic knowledge is verifiable; it is not just a collection of abstract ideas. But to realize the truth of Vedic knowledge one must approach a bona fide guru. Mundane scholars, however, tend to be proud of their textbook knowledge and flout this requirement, all the while considering themselves authorities on Vedic knowledge. In reality, by not applying themselves to this knowledge in the prescribed way they ensure that for them the door to its mysteries will ever remain locked. The attempts of these hapless scholars to understand the Vedas without joining an authorized disciplic succession are like someone's trying to taste honey by licking the outside of a honey-filled jar. Their labor is futile and their analysis and conclusions are useless. By contrast, the great Vaisnava acaryas all became Vedic authorities by virtue of their scrupulously following the injunction to surrender to a guru coming in disciplic succession. As far as sincerity and credibility are taken into account, therefore, the evidence weighs heavily in favor of the saintly acaryas. In any case, a seriously interested person can always take up the Vedic process himself and personally verify the Vedic conclusions. Granted, this requires some effort, and it is of course much easier to offer glib speculations denying the Vedas' authority than to discipline oneself and follow their instructions. Ultimately, however, the Vedas' scholarly detractors can never prove their claims. sIn addition to the spiritual knowledge it contains, the Vedic literature has references to many modern scientific achievements. The Vedas have sections on astronomy, medicine, yoga, music, drama, dance, algebra, civil engineering, and so on. The list is long indeed. These are all arts and sciences that were practiced in India centuries before the dawn of their modern counterparts. His Divine Grace A.C. Bhaktivedanta Swami Srila Prabhupada writes in his introduction to Srimad-Bhagavatam, "The authority of the Vedas is unchallengeable and stands without any question of doubt. The conch shell and cow dung are the bone and stool of two living beings. But because they have been recommended by the Vedas as pure, people accept them as such because of the authority of the Vedas." It has been proven by scientific experiment that cow dung is antiseptic and medicinal. It would be simplistic, therefore, to brush aside the Vedas as manmade. Had this been the case, renowned thinkers and powerful logicians like Srila Jiva Gosvami and Srila Madhvacarya would have taken no stock in them. Still one may question the eternal nature of the Vedas on the grounds that any scriptural references in support of them will necessarily come from the Vedas themselves. In logic, citing evidence that relies on itself for proof of legitimacy is called circular reasoning and is unacceptable. The Vedas may thus appear tainted with this defect of svasraya, or begging the question, relying as they do on themselves to establish their own authority. Circular reasoning would be a serious defect, but a closer look shows that the Vedas are an exception to this fallacy. That the Vedas rely on themselves to establish their authority is not a defect; rather it is logical and sensible. It simply affirms their absolute, transcendental nature, since if some other source were needed to confirm the authority of the Vedas, the authority of that new source would surpass that of the

Vedas. In such a case an inquisitive person would be obliged to discard the Vedas and begin all over again analyzing the new source's authenticity. Before long this new source would need confirmation from yet another source. This could go on ad infinitum. But the absence of such a superior source with reference to the Vedas shows that the authority of the Vedas as apauruseya-sabda-pramana is final. Logically, therefore, no other pramana can substantiate the Vedas. And that is why the Vedas are traditionally accepted as "mother." When a person wants to know who his father is, he cannot find out by direct perception, nor by inference or deduction. To know for sure who is father is he has to accept his mother's testimony. We similarly have to accept the revealed knowledge of the Vedas to learn about the reality beyond our sensory and intellectual power. The theories advanced by some scholars about the Vedas' mundane origin are unreliable and untenable because these scholars have not studied the Vedas in a bona fide disciplic succession. Because of the scholars' four human defects and their being impelled by ulterior motive—desires for degrees, reputation, research funding, and the like—divine arrangement has barred them from gaining real insight into the Vedas. These scholars will readily admit that to understand any complex material subject one needs the help of experts in that field, but somehow they reject the necessity of a bona fide guru for understanding the Vedas. They do not know that in the case of the Vedic literature submission to a guru is an absolute requirement. This prerequisite serves as a kind of password protecting the Vedas against insincere persons who would try to exploit or refute them. In the Bhagavad-gita (7.25) the Supreme Lord affirms: naham prakasah sarvasya yoga-maya-samavrtah mudho 'yam nabhijanati loko mam ajam avyayam "I am never manifest to the foolish and unintelligent. For them I am covered by My Yogamaya, and therefore they do not know that I am unborn and infallible." This statement is relevant both when the Lord comes to this world in person and when He reveals Himself in scripture. The Lord has given the conditioned souls the method by which they can approach Him, and that method begins with taking knowledge from a bona fide disciplic succession. Those unwilling to thus qualify themselves can have no real access to Him, even if they study the Vedas on their own for many lifetimes. In summary, owing to the absence of any conclusive refutation of the Vedas' being apuruseya, , assaas well as on the authority of the great acaryas and saints coming in the bona fide disciplic successions, and ultimately by accepting the testimony of the Vedas themselves, we reasonably conclude that the Vedas exist eternally and are an infallible source of knowledge. Next, Srila Jiva Gosvami shows that inference cannot be an independent means for understanding the Absolute Truth.

The following scriptural statements confirm this conclusion [TEXT 10]: 1. “Logic cannot provide final proof of anything” [Vedanta-sutra 2.1.11]. 2. “One should not use logic to try to understand what is inconceivable” [Mahabharata, Bhisma-parva 5.22]. 3. “Scriptures are the source of knowledge of the Absolute Truth” [Vedanta-sutra 1.1.3]. 4. “The Vedas are the source of knowledge of the Absolute Truth” [Vedanta-sutra 2.1.27]. 5. “O Supreme Lord, Your Veda is the supreme eye for the forefathers, demigods, and human beings. By it they can understand Your form and qualities, along with the highest goal of life and the means for attaining it, none of which can be ascertained otherwise” [Srimad-Bhagavatam 11.20.4].

COMMENTARY The Authority of the Vedas Here, using scriptural evidence, Srila Jiva Gosvami confirms the conclusion about inferential knowledge he reached in the previous Text. Having argued that logic is not the most reliable means of acquiring knowledge, and having used logic to establish this conclusion, he now presents appropriate Vedic references as the final proof. Again, one should not think that Jiva Gosvami is guilty of circular reasoning because he resorts to the Vedas themselves to confirm an assertion about the Vedas. The Vedas are self-luminous like the sun. Just as the sun illuminates itself, independent of any other source of light, so only the Vedas can establish themselves as an infallible pramana. As explained in the previous Text, this self-confirmation is not a defect in the process of sabda-pramana, or verbal revelation, because if the Vedas indeed convey knowledge of the Absolute Truth, we can justifiably look to the Vedas themselves to confirm their own authority. And those who have approached Vedic knowledge in the prescribed way have corroborated by their own realization that the Vedas do describe the Absolute Truth. Another consideration is that our objective is to know the inconceivable reality, and after analyzing all the sources of knowledge we find that no source but the Vedas affords us the opportunity for achieving this objective. If all the best logicians, nuclear physicists, astrophysicists, and other leaders in various departments of science and philosophy who lived in the past, live in the present, and will live in the future could somehow assemble and deliberate together, they would be unable to shed any light on the nature of transcendence. Any theory this assembly might propose would only be a subjective speculation, liable to endless refutations and counterrefutations.

Understanding the futility of such endeavors, Srila Jiva Gosvami has gone directly to the heart of the matter by citing Vedic authority. Srila Vyasadeva presented the conclusion of all the Vedas in the concise aphorisms of the Vedanta-sutra, also called the Brahma-sutra. Sutra 2.1.11 is tarkapratisthanat: "Because reason has no sure basis." In other words, logic has no absolute stance because its results are always subject to revision. Deductive reasoning is based on human perception and intelligence, which are both unreliable owing to the four inherent human defects mentioned earlier. And since different people have varying capacities and types of intelligence, the opinions they derive from their own intelligence also vary. Logical reasoning therefore has its limitations; it is inconclusive in transcendental matters except when supported by the scriptures. In his Bhakti-rasamrta-sindhu (1.1.46), Srila Rupa Gosvami quotes a verse from Bhartrhari's Vakya-padiya (1.34) to this effect: yatnenapadito 'py arthah kusalair anumatrbhih abhiyukta-tarair anyair anyathaivopapadyate "Expert logicians may establish their proofs with great endeavor, but these proofs will simply be contradicted by stronger logicians establishing newer conclusions." The truth of this statement is confirmed in the fields of modern science and philosophy, where there is endless theorizing about the origins of the universe and the meaning of life. Srila Jiva Gosvami also cites the Mahabharata's claim that because logic is limited one should not use it to try to understand inconceivable realities. For example, by mere logic one will certainly fail to understand such childhood pastimes of Lord Krsna's as His dama-bandhana-lila, in which His mother bound Him up with ropes. When mother Yasoda tried to tie Krsna to a grinding mortar, she was amazed to find that when she joined all her ropes together the new length of rope was still too short! Yet the black thread around Krsna's waist did not break, nor did His waist become inflated. Such inconceivable behavior by the Absolute Person is entirely beyond the reach of all logical faculties; one can understand it only by accepting the authority of Vedic testimony, sabda-pramana. Still, although logical reasoning is not a reliable independent method in the quest for knowledge of the absolute, this does not mean all logic is useless. The very idea that logic is not fully reliable is itself known through the use of logic supported by scripture. We should certainly use our reason in trying to understand the statements of the Vedas. The Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad (2.4.5) thus states, atma va are drastavyah srotavyo mantavyo nididhyasitavyo maitreyi: "The Self, my dear Maitreyi, should be realized, and so it should be heard about, reflected on, and deeply meditated on." Here the word mantavyah refers to logical understanding. We should apply logic to properly understand the Vedic injunctions, but we should reject logic that runs counter to their conclusions. Mere logic can never supersede the opinions of the Vedas, which are free of the human defects. While discussing this topic in his Sarva-samvadini, Srila Jiva Gosvami quotes the Kurma Purana: purvaparavirodhena ko 'nv artho 'bhimato bhavet ity-adyam uhanam tarkah suska-tarkam tu varjayet "Conjecturing about the meaning of a scriptural passage by referring to the statements preceding and following it is called proper logic. One should abandon dry logic, however." We find excellent examples of dry logic among speculative philosophers. These thinkers generally use their reason to prove a preconceived opinion, and in their stubbornness they of course fail to maintain any objectivity. They disregard scriptural injunctions that do not support their conclusions. They have no success in applying their method to ultimate matters because no one can penetrate the inconceivable transcendental plane by any amount of speculation. Such persons' interest in philosophy is a futile mental exercise with no tangible result. No matter how profound and mesmerizing their vision, it is inevitable that some other powerful logician will eventually defeat them. The Vedas enjoin, therefore, that those who seek the Absolute Truth should abandon dry logic, but not all logic. Indeed, in the Bhagavad-gita (10.32) Lord Krsna Himself declares that logic aimed at understanding the Absolute as it is presented in scripture is one of His opulences: vadah pravadatam aham."Among logicians I am the conclusive truth." Thus Srila Jiva Gosvami is right in accepting anumana as one of the principal means of gaining valid knowledge. "'Jiva Gosvami next cites two more Brahma-sutras (1.1.3 and 2.1.27), which state emphatically that one can understand the Absolute Truth only from the revealed scriptures. He then concludes by quoting from Srimad-Bhagavatam to show that not only human beings but even superhumans like the demigods need the Vedas' help. Thus he emphasizes the need for everyone—humans, subhumans, and superhumans—to rely on the Vedas as the flawless means for understanding the Absolute Truth. In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami begins his demonstration that the Puranas are even more important for us than the Vedas.

But at present it is difficult to study the Vedas in their entirety or to understand them. In addition, the great thinkers who have commented on the Vedas interpret them in contradictory ways. We should therefore study the Itihasas and Puranas, since they are Vedic in nature and are conclusive in determining the Vedas' meaning. Moreover, with the help of the Itihasas and Puranas we can infer the meaning of the unavailable portions of the Vedas. Thus at present only the Itihasas and Puranas constitute the appropriate source of valid knowledge.

This is why the Mahabharata [Adi-parva 1.267] and Manu-samhita state, "One should complement one's understanding of the Vedas with the help of the Itihasas and Puranas." And elsewhere it is stated, "The Puranas are called by that name because they complete (purana)." One should not try to “complete” or explain the meaning of the Vedas with something that is not Vedic in nature, just as one should not finish an incomplete gold bracelet with lead.

But, one may object, if the Itihasas and Puranas are actually included as part of the TEXT of the Vedas, we need to identify some other Puranas than those we are familiar with; otherwise the Itihasas and Puranas would not qualify as nondifferent from the Vedas [but would rather be wholly identical with them]. To this we reply that the Itihasas and Puranas are nondifferent from the Vedas inasmuch as both kinds of literary works have no human author and present the same detailed knowledge. Nonetheless, there is some difference between them with regard to intonation and word order.

TEXT 12.4

The Madhyandina-sruti [Brhad-aranyaka Up. 2.4.10] implies the oneness of the Itihasas and Puranas with the Rg and other Vedas in terms of the apauruseya nature all these works share: “My dear Maitreyi, the Rg, Yajur, Sama, and Atharva Vedas, as well as the Itihasas and Puranas, all appear from the breathing of the Supreme Being.”

COMMENTARY Difficulties in Studying the Vedas In the previous Texts Srila Jiva Gosvami has established that the Vedas—Rg, Yajur, Sama, and Atharva—constitute the valid means of acquiring knowledge about the Supreme. Here he points out the practical difficulties involved with studying them nowadays. The first difficulty is the unavailability of the complete TEXT of the Vedas. Originally the Veda was one, and at the advent of the current age, Kali-yuga, Srila Vyasadeva divided it into four: vyadadhad yajïa-santatyai vedam ekam catur-vidham (Bhag. 1.4.19). Then, as explained in the Kurma Purana (52.19–20), Vyasadeva’s followers further divided the four Vedas into 1,130 branches: eka-vimsati-bhedena rg-vedam krtavan pura sakhanam tu satenaiva yajur-vedam athakarot @vp= sama-vedam sahasrena sakhanam prabibheda sah atharvanam atho vedam bibheda navakena tu “Formerly the Rg Veda was divided into 21 branches, the Yajur Veda into 100 branches, the Sama Veda into 1,000 branches, and the Atharva Veda into 9 branches.” Each of these branches has 4 subdivisions called Samhita, Brahmana, Aranyaka, and Upanisad. So all together the Vedas consist of 1,130 Samhitas, 1,130 Brahmanas, 1,130 Aranyakas, and 1,130 Upanisads, a total of 4,520 titles. By the influence of time, however, many texts have been lost. At present only about 11 Samhitas, 18 Brahmanas, 7 Aranyakas, and 220 Upanisads are available. This constitutes less than 6% of the original Vedas. The second difficulty one faces in trying to study the Vedas concerns their language. There are two varieties of Sanskrit, vaidika ("Vedic") and laukika ("worldly" or "ordinary"), and the Vedas contain only the former. Years of study are required to become an accomplished scholar of ordinary Sanskrit, but if such a scholar wishes to understand Vedic Sanskrit he has to learn extra rules of grammar and a different vocabulary, which may require years of additional study. And even when the language of the Vedic verses is fathomed, these verses are so cryptic that one cannot possibly decipher them without hearing them explained by a bona fide guru in disciplic succession. Another difficulty: Even before studying the Vedas one must study their six corollaries, or "limbs," called Vedangas. These six limbs are siksa, the science of pronunciation; kalpa, the process of performing sacrifice; vyakarana, the rules of grammar; nirukta, the meanings and derivations of difficult words used in the Vedas; jyotisa, astronomy and astrology; and chandas, Vedic meters. Each of these limbs is extensive and requires serious study. To further complicate matters, with the advent of Kali-yuga human memory has grown weaker. In former times there were no books: a student could assimilate all knowledge from his spiritual master simply by hearing and remembering. But this is no longer possible. In this age the food, water, air, and even the very ether are all polluted, and all these factors have taken their toll on human memory, making it difficult to study even the available 6% of the Vedic texts, what to speak of the entire four Vedas and their branches. Srila Jiva Gosvami therefore concludes that although the four Vedas are perfect sabda-pramana, in the present age it is impractical to study them thoroughly and thereby ascertain the Absolute Truth. As an alternative, someone may suggest that since only a few of the Vedas are available and even they are difficult to understand, why not simply study the Vedanta-sutra, the definitive summary of the Vedic conclusions? To this Jiva Gosvami replies that various thinkers differ about the meaning of the Vedanta-sutra and so this method will likely just lead to confusion. Furthermore, important thinkers like Gautama, Kapila, and Jaimini adhere to other philosophies, so why should we accept only Vedanta rather than one of their theories? For all these reasons we must admit that even with the help of the Vedas and Vedanta we will not be able to understand sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana. To solve this dilemma Srila Jiva Gosvami proposes an alternative: study of the Itihasas and Puranas. But although the Itihasas and Puranas are one with the Vedas, this does not mean they are literally identical with them. Otherwise the words Itihasa and Purana would simply be names for certain special parts of the Vedas. The Vedas are written in Vedic Sanskrit, which necessarily involves three different tone accents—udatta (high), svarita (intermediate), and anudatta (low). In the Vedic language one word can actually be changed to another if the accent is changed. We see an example of this in the history of the demon Vrtra, who was created by the chanting of a mantra during a sacrifice. This demon was supposed to kill Indra, but during the sacrifice the priests pronounced the mantra indra-satro vivardhasva with the wrong accent. The result was just the opposite of what was intended: Indra killed Vrtrasura. Another significant difference between the four Vedas and the Itihasas and Puranas is the sequence of particular words, which is rigidly fixed in the Vedas. No one should change even one syllable of the Vedic texts, which have maintained their primeval arrangement of words since the beginning of creation. Techniques have been devised, such as pada-patha, krama-patha, ghana-patha, and jata-patha, for keeping the word order intact. But while no rewording or rearrangement of words is allowed in the Vedas, the Itihasas and Puranas need not be so rigidly preserved: their exact wordings are allowed to vary in different yuga cycles. Because no special techniques are used to keep the word order of the Puranas and Itihasas intact, we find slight differences from edition to edition. Srila Vyasa compiled the Itihasa called Mahabharata for people of this age specifically because they are not qualified to understand the Vedas. This is explained in Srimad-Bhagavatam (1.4.25): stri-sudra-dvija-bandhunam trayi na sruti-gocara karma-sreyasi mudhanam sreya eva bhaved iha iti bharatam akhyanam krpaya munina krtam “Out of compassion, the sage thought it wise to do something that would enable those who were ignorant of how to act for their own welfare to achieve the ultimate goal of life. Thus he compiled the great historical narration called the Mahabharata for women, laborers, and friends of the twice-born because they do not have access to the Vedas.” Srila Jiva Gosvami says that the Puranas are called so because they make the Vedas complete. Does he mean the Vedas are incomplete? No, but the Puranas are a form of explanatory, supplementary literature that help us understand the terse, cryptic message of the Vedas. Like the Vedas, they convey knowledge of the Absolute Truth, and to do so they must be transcendental like the Vedas. The Skanda Purana (4.95.12) indicates the equal transcendental status of the Puranas, Itihasas, and Vedas as follows: vede ramayane caiva purane bharate tatha adav ante ca madhye ca harih sarvatra giyate “In the Vedas, Ramayana, Puranas, and Mahabharata Lord Hari is glorified everywhere—in the beginning, middle, and end.” The conclusion is that because the Itihasas and Puranas emanate from the same source as the four Vedas and have the same purport, they are also equally authoritative. Next Srila Jiva Gosvami explains more about how the Itihasas and Puranas are not inferior to the Vedas.

The Prabhasa-khanda of the Skanda Purana [2.3.5] therefore states: “Long ago, Lord Brahma, the grandfather of the demigods, performed severe penances, and as a result the Vedas appeared, along with their six supplements and their pada and krama texts. Then the entire Purana emanated from his mouth. Composed of eternal sound and consisting of one billion verses, it is the unchanging, sacred embodiment of all scriptures. You should know that of the various divisions of this Purana, the Brahma Purana is the first."

The figure one billion cited here refers to the number of verses existing in Brahma's domain. Srimad-Bhagavatam's Third Canto gives a similar description in the passage starting with the words rg-yajuh-samatharvakhyan vedan purvadibhir mukhair: "Beginning from the front face of Brahma, gradually the four Vedas—Rg, Yajur, Sama, and Atharva—became manifest" [Bhag. 3.12.37]. In this passage we find the statement "Then Brahma created the fifth Veda—the Puranas and the histories—from all his mouths, since he could see all the past, present, and future" [Bhag. 3.12.39]. Here the word veda is used specifically in reference to the Itihasas and Puranas.

And elsewhere it is said, "The Puranas are the fifth Veda," "The Itihasas and Puranas are called the fifth Veda" [Bhag. 1.4.20], and "He taught the Vedas along with the fifth of their number, the Mahabharata" [M.Bh. Moksa-dharma 340.21]. If the Itihasas and Puranas were not Vedic, it would have been inappropriate for the preceding verses to include them as the fifth Veda, since normally one counts together only objects of the same kind.

Also, the Bhavisya Purana states, "The fifth Veda, written by Sri Krsna-dvaipayana Vyasa, is called the Mahabharata." Another reference is found in the Chandogya Upanisad of the Kauthumiya school of the Sama Veda: "Venerable sir, I have studied the Rg, Yajur, Sama, and Atharva Vedas, and also the Itihasas and Puranas, which are the fifth Veda" [Kauthumiya Chandogya Up. 7.1.2].

ata eva `asya mahato bhutasya' ity-adav itihasa-puranayos caturnam evantar-bhutatva-kalpanaya prasiddha-pratyakhyanam nirastam. tad uktam `brahmam puranam prathamam' ity-adi. Thus is refuted the frequently raised objection that the Itihasas and Puranas, said in the Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad to emanate from the breath of the Supreme Being, are included in the four Vedas and therefore have no separate existence. The same is stated in the words “Brahma Purana is the first.<193>” [Skanda Pur.].

COMMENTARY The Itihasas and Puranas Are Vedic To substantiate the statement from the Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad quoted in TEXT 12.4 (B.a. Up. 2.4.10), which establishes the Vedic nature of the Itihasas and Puranas, Srila Jiva Gosvami here cites more evidence from the Puranas, Itihasas, and Upanisads. From these references the following is clear: The Puranas and Itihasas have the same source as the four Vedas and are in fact called the fifth Veda. Srila Jiva Gosvami here refers to the frequent objection that the Itihasas and Puranas cannot be the fifth Veda because they are part of the four Vedas. While explaining the above-mentioned statement from the Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad, some followers of the Mimamsaka school claim that the words Itihasa and Purana refer to historical passages found in some parts of the Vedas and not to separate works. Examples of sruti statements sometimes considered Puranic are yato va imani bhutani jayante (“from whom these beings take birth”; Taittiriya Up. 3.1) and sa brahmana srjati rudrena vilapayati harir adir anadih (“Lord Hari creates through Brahma and destroys through Rudra, but He Himself is the beginingless source of all”). These and similar passages are referred to as "Purana" because they deal with creation and destruction, which are among the subjects treated in the Puranas. Mimamsakas further argue that over an immense period many of these original Puranic portions of the Vedas were lost and those that remained became difficult to understand. Therefore, the Mimamsakas propose, Srila Vyasa mercifully wrote new Itihasas and Puranas for the benefit of the unintelligent people of Kali-yuga, and this is what is described in Srimad-Bhagavatam (1.4.25). Hence the Itihasas and Puranas mentioned in the Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad are part of the Vedas, not independent books, and therefore it is incorrect to conclude that they are the fifth Veda. This is the Mimamsakas’ argument. Srila Jiva Gosvami refutes this argument with references from the Vedas and also from the Itihasas and Puranas themselves. These citations confirm the Itihasas’ and Puranas’ status as the fifth Veda on the grounds that they emanated separately from Lord Brahma’s mouths. If they were only parts of the Vedas, there would be no reason for these authoritative scriptures to call them the fifth Veda. Moreover, there are many statements about the apauruseya, Vedic nature of the Itihasas and Puranas in the Vedic Samhitas, Brahmanas, Aranyakas, Upanisads, Kalpa-sutras, Dharma-sutras, and Grhya-sutras, as well as in the Puranas, Itihasas, and other smrti texts. Here are a few of these statements: rcah samani chandamsi puranam yajusa saha ucchistaj jajïire sarve divi deva divi-sritah “The Rg, Sama, Yajur, and Atharva Vedas appeared from the Supreme Lord along with the Puranas and all the demigods residing in the heavenly planets” (Atharva Veda 11.7.24). sa brhatim disam anu vyacalat tam itihasas ca puranam ca gathas ca itihasasya ca sa vai puranasya ca gathanam ca narasamsinam ca priyam dhama bhavati ya evam veda. “He approached the Brhati meter, and thus the Itihasas, Puranas, Gathas, and Narasamsis became favorable to him. In the Vayu Purana [60.16–18, 21–22] Suta Gosvami explains why the Itihasas and Puranas are considered the fifth Veda: “Srila Vyasadeva, the almighty Supreme Lord, accepted me [Suta Gosvami] as the qualified speaker of the Itihasas and Puranas. In the beginning there was only one Veda, the Yajur Veda, which Srila Vyasa divided into four parts. These gave rise to the four activities called catur-hotra, by means of which Srila Vyasa arranged for the performance of sacrifice. “The adhvaryu priests carry out their responsibilities with yajur-mantras, the hota priests with rg-mantras, the udgata priests with sama-mantras, and the brahma priests with atharva-mantras.” Suta Gosvami further states: “O best of the twice-born, thereafter Srila Vyasa, who best knows the meaning of the Puranas, compiled them and the Itihasas by combining various akhyanas, upakhyanas, and gathas. Whatever remained after Vyasa divided the Vedas into four parts was also Yajur Veda. This is the conclusion of the scriptures.”

The Puranas are also used in the formal study of the Vedas called brahma-yajïa: “The Itihasas and Puranas are Vedas” [Taittiriya Aranyaka 2.9]. If the Itihasas and Puranas were not Vedic, they would not be used this way in the brahma-yajïa. n the Matsya Purana [53.8] the Supreme Lord says, “O best of the twice-born, foreseeing that the Purana will gradually be neglected, in every age I assume the form of Vyasa and abridge it.” This means that Srila Vyasa condenses the already existing Purana so that people can easily comprehend it.

Even today the original Purana of one billion verses exists in the worlds of the demigods. The essential meaning of that Purana is contained in the abridged version of four hundred thousand verses.”

atra tu `yac chistam tu yajur-vedah' ity uktatvat tasyabhidheya-bhagas catur-laksas tv atra martya-loke sanksepena sara-sangrahena nivesito na tu racanantarenety arthah. Suta’s statement [quoted in TEXT 14.1] that “whatever remained after Vyasa divided the Vedas into four parts was also Yajur Veda” indicates that the essence of the original Purana formed the abridged version of four hundred thousand verses in the world of mortals. It is not a different composition.

COMMENTARY The Itihasas and Puranas Are the Fifth Veda The Itihasas and Puranas are called the fifth Veda because they are derived from the original Veda, the Yajur Veda. This is explained in the section of the Vayu Purana that describes the catur-hotra priests. There are four kinds of rtviks, or priests, needed to perform a Vedic sacrifice, and their duties were originally all known from the Yajur Veda. But later on the Veda was divided into four parts for easy understanding and application. The duties of the four priests—adhvaryu, udgata, hota, and brahma—are known from each of these four divisions. The adhvaryu is associated with the Yajur Veda, and his duties include sanctifying the sacrificial paraphernalia and measuring the shape and size of the sacrificial arena. The udgata priest studies the Sama Veda and chants hymns during the sacrifice to propitiate the Lord. The hota priest decorates the altar, invokes the demigods, pours oblations, and chants the Rg Veda. The brahma priest is a student of the Atharva Veda and acts as the supervisor and coordinator of sacrificial ceremonies. After Srila Vyasa compiled the four Vedas, there still remained one billion verses from the original Yajur Veda. These verses became the original Purana, which is still available on the heavenly planets. Out of compassion for the people of Kali-yuga, Vyasadeva extracted five hundred thousand essential verses from this original Purana. Four hundred thousand of these He divided into the eighteen Puranas. The remaining verses formed the Itihasa called Mahabharata. The Itihasa and Puranas are therefore called the fifth Veda because they were produced from the original Veda. Another reason the Puranas and Itihasas are considered the fifth Veda, distinct from the other four, is that the priests of the four Vedas do not use the Puranas and Itihasas in sacrificial ceremonies, even though these works are studied along with the Vedas. In his COMMENTARY on the Visnu Purana (3.6.16), Srila Sridhara Svami defines the terms akhyana, upakhyana, and gatha: svayam-drstartha-kathanam prahur akhyanakam budhah srutasyarthasya kathanam upakhyanam pracaksate gathas tu pitr-prthivy-adi-gitayah "An akhyana is a narration of something witnessed by the speaker, while an upakhyana is a narration of something the speaker has not witnessed but rather heard about. Gathas are songs about the forefathers and earthly beings." The words yac chistam tu yajur-vedah ("The remaining part was also called Yajur Veda"; Vayu Pur. 60.16.22) signify that the Itihasas and Puranas are apauruseya, not composed by any mortal; thus they have the same authority as the Vedas, having been compiled by Srila Vyasa from the Supreme Lord's very breath. While compiling the Puranas and Itihasas He included some of His own statements to make the narration more easily comprehensible. For example, in the Bhagavad-gita the words "Arjuna said" and "Krsna said" are added by Srila Vyasa to help the reader understand. But we should not consider even these added statements to have been written by a mortal being, since Vyasa is an incarnation of the Supreme Lord. This is evident from the verse of the Matsya Purana quoted in the text. Someone might raise the objection that from the Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad (2.4.10) it is clear that the four Vedas individually appeared from the Supreme Lord. Why, then, is it said that Vyasadeva divided the one Veda into four parts? We reply that while it is true that each Veda individually emanated from the Lord, originally all four Vedas were collectively called the Yajur Veda because that Veda is much larger than the other three. Generally, the largest member of a set can represent the whole set. In Sanskrit this is called adhikyena vyapadesa bhavanti, or the law that the largest constituent represents the whole. A herd of cows with just a few buffaloes in it is still called a herd of cows, and the four fingers and one thumb are usually called the five fingers. Because the four Vedas had become disordered, Sri Vyasa rearranged the Vedic texts to help clearly define the duties of the four sacrificial priests. How the Vedas became mixed up because of a curse by Gautama Rsi will be told in TEXT 16. In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami further substantiates his conclusion about the Vedic nature of the Itihasas and Puranas, and he also explains the meaning of the name Veda-vyasa.

Similarly, the Vayaviya-samhita of the Siva Purana indicates the Vedic nature of the Puranas by discussing their appearance along with the Vedas: “The ingenious Lord abridged the Veda and then divided it [vyasta] into four. Therefore He became known as Veda-vyasa. He also summarized the Puranas in four hundred thousand verses, but in the heavenly planets they still comprise one billion verses” [Siva Pur. 7.1.1.37–38]. Here the word sanksiptam (“condensed”) implies “condensed by Him.”

The name of a Purana—Skanda, Agni, and so on—refers to its original speaker, as with the Katha Upanisad, which was promulgated by the sage Katha. Or else the name refers to the person who arranged the Purana’s contents. The reason the Puranas are occasionally described as impermanent is that they are sometimes manifest and sometimes not. In this way [by the arguments and evidence provided in Texts 13, 14, and 15.1–2] the Vedic nature of the Itihasas and Puranas is established.

It is the transcendental fruit of all the Vedas and is purely spiritual and conscious. Whoever chants it but once, whether with faith or with contempt, is liberated."

The Visnu-dharma Purana states: "A person who chants the two syllables ha-ri has already completed the study of the Rg, Yajur, Sama, and Atharva Vedas." And the Visnu Purana affirms that the Puranas and Itihasas establish the meaning of the Vedas: "On the pre TEXT of writing the Mahabharata, Srila Vyasa has explained the Vedas' meaning. The Padma Purana says, "Brahma and others do not know what Bhagavan Veda-vyasa knows. Indeed, He knows everything known to others, but what He knows is beyond everyone else's grasp."

COMMENTARY The Itihasas, Puranas, and Vedas All Have the Same Origin The word sanksiptam in the verse cited here from the Siva Purana (7.1.1.37) is significant. It means "condensed," not "composed." Srila Veda-vyasa, the literary incarnation of God, condensed the already existing Vedas. Then He took unused verses from that abridged portion and made them into the Puranas. Thus He did not create the Puranas as an original composition. This confirms that the Puranas, by virtue of their transcendental origin, are equal to the four Vedas. They are eternal and apauruseya. One may protest that since the Puranas have names such as Skanda and Agni they must have been composed by these persons, and so they are neither eternal nor apauruseya. But if this were the case, the

Vedas themselves would have to be considered noneternal compositions since their parts have names like Katha Upanisad and Aitareya Brahmana, which refer to the sages Katha and Aitareya. The explanation is that portions of the Vedas are named after certain sages not because they wrote those portions but because they were these portions' main teachers and exponents. Since persons with names like Katha and Aitareya appear in every millennium, one should not think that before the appearance of the known Katha and Aitareya these names were meaningless words in the Vedas. In the same way, several of the Puranas are named either after their first teacher or the person who rearranged them. It may sometimes be that over the course of time a certain Vedic work becomes less popular or is completely forgotten on this planet. Eventually some sage or demigod again speaks it, and then the book becomes known by his name. An example of this is given in Srimad-Bhagavatam, where sage Yajïavalkya is described as receiving the Vajasaneyi-samhita of the Yajur Veda from the sun-god: "Satisfied by such glorification, the powerful sun-god assumed the form of a horse (vaja) and presented to the sage Yajïavalkya the yajur-mantras previously unknown in human society" (Bhag. 12.6.73). Just as the Lord seems to take birth and disappear like a mortal being, the Vedic literature similarly becomes manifest and unmanifest. Srimad-Bhagavatam had become unmanifest at the end of the Dvapara-yuga, five thousand years ago. At that time Narada Muni instructed Vyasa to again reveal the Bhagavatam. If the Bhagavatam had not existed before, Puranas older than the Bhagavatam would not refer to it by name. In the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda, Gautama advises Ambarisa Maharaja, who reigned in the Satya-yuga, to study Srimad-Bhagavatam. Thus the Puranas are eternal, but sometimes they are manifest and sometimes unmanifest in human society. As the Lord is independent in His appearance and disappearance, so by His free will He speaks the revealed scriptures through the medium of various sages and gives these scriptures various names. Another objection to the Itihasas' and Puranas' Vedic status may be stated as follows: In Srimad-Bhagavatam (1.4.25) Suta Gosvami says, stri-sudra-dvija-bandhunam trayi na sruti-gocara<193>iti bharatam akhyanam krpaya munina krtam: "Women, laborers, and unqualified descendants of the twice-born have no access to the Vedas.<193>Therefore the sage [Vyasa] mercifully compiled the Mahabharata." Since the Mahabharata, the foremost of the Itihasas, was written specifically for women and others with no access to the Vedas, how can the Itihasas be part of the Vedas? Moreover, in TEXT 13 of the same chapter, Saunaka Rsi says to Suta Gosvami, manye tvam visaye vacam snatam anyatra chandasat: "We consider you expert in all subjects except the Vedas." So if Suta Gosvami was not expert in the Vedas yet was being requested to narrate the Puranas (specifically the Bhagavata Purana), how can the Puranas be part of the Vedas? Anticipating these objections, Srila Jiva Gosvami compares the privilege of studying the Itihasas and Puranas to that of chanting Krsna's holy name, the choicest fruit of the Vedas. The holy name of Krsna is purely Vedic, yet anyone may chant it, including those who have no right to study the Vedas. Similarly, the Itihasas and Puranas are also purely Vedic, yet even a sincere sudra or outcaste can approach them, just as he or she may chant the holy name of the Lord. As one can gain all perfection simply by chanting Lord Krsna's holy name, which is the ultimate fruit of the Vedas, so one can learn the essence of the Vedas by studying the Itihasas and Puranas, even without studying the Vedas themselves. If one could not do so, then knowledge of how to attain perfection would be inaccessible to those who are barred from studying the Vedas because they are not twice-born. Finally, even if one were to include the Itihasas and Puranas among other smrti scriptures written by saintly sages to explain the meaning of the Vedas, the Itihasas and Puranas occupy a unique place because of the eminence of their propounder, Srila Vyasadeva, an incarnation of the Supreme Lord. In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami elaborates on how the Itihasas and Puranas are superexcellent by virtue of their compiler's divinity.

The Skanda Purana states, "Just as a person picks up things in his own house and uses them, many people have taken knowledge from the sky of Vyasa's heart for their own use." We also find this statement by Parasara Rsi in the Visnu Purana [3.4.2–5]: "Thereafter, during the twenty-eighth manv-antara, the Lord in the form of my son Vyasa took the one Veda, consisting of four sections, and divided it into four separate parts. Just as this intelligent Vyasa divided the Veda, previously all other Vyasas, including myself, also divided it. O best of the twice-born, understand that in every cycle of four yugas Vyasas come and arrange the Veda into various branches. But know, O Maitreya, that Sri Krsna-dvaipayana Vyasa is Lord Narayana Himself. Who else in this world could have written the great epic Mahabharata?"

The Skanda Purana further states, "In Satya-yuga the knowledge that emanated from Lord Narayana remained pure. It became somewhat polluted in Treta-yuga, and completely so in Dvapara-yuga. When ignorance had covered that knowledge because of Gautama Rsi's curse, the demigods became perplexed. Led by Brahma and Rudra, they approached Lord Narayana, the Supreme Person and faultless protector, and told Him why they had come. On the request of the demigods, Lord Hari then descended as the great yogi Vyasa, son of Satyavati and Parasara, and re-established the forgotten Vedas."

Thus it is established that studying the Itihasas and Puranas is supremely beneficial. And of these two, the Puranas are more excellent. As stated in the Naradiya Purana, "O lovely one, I consider the Puranas more important than the Vedas because the Puranas firmly establish all the Vedic meanings. There is no doubt of this. One who disrespects the Puranas will take birth as a subhuman; even if he can expertly control his senses and mind, he can attain no good destination."

COMMENTARY The Compiler of the Itihasas and Puranas is Unique To a large extent one can know the quality of a product by assessing the quality of the person who made it. By this criterion the Puranas and Itihasas are supremely excellent, since they were compiled by Lord Narayana Himself in the form of Srila Vyasadeva. Here Srila Vyasa's mind is compared to the unlimited sky, indicating that just as the sky accommodates all objects, so Vyasa's mind contains all knowledge. Another significance of comparing Vyasa's mind to the sky is that the sky is the medium for sound, which transmits knowledge. In other words, Vyasa's mind is the medium for transcendental sound, which is the basis of all kinds of knowledge. All other thinkers, both on this planet and on higher planets, simply make use of the knowledge Srila Vyasa has given. According to one Sanskrit saying, vyasocchistam jagat sarvam: "The whole world tastes the remnants of Vyasa's knowledge." Any "new" idea one may find or conceive of already exists in His writings. Thus all the writers throughout history have borrowed from Him, directly or indirectly. According to Parasara Muni, at the beginning of each Kali-yuga in the repeated cycle of four yugas, a vyasa, or "compiler," arranges the Vedas. In the present reign of Manu, Parasara himself was the twenty-sixth Vyasa, and Sri Krsna-dvaipayana is the twenty-eighth. Of the twenty-eight Vyasas who have appeared until now, Krsna-dvaipayana is special because He is an incarnation of Lord Narayana. He appeared on the request of the demigods at the end of the Dvapara-yuga, after a curse spoken by Gautama Muni caused ignorance to cover the Vedic knowledge. Chapter 171 of the Varaha Purana relates how Gautama Muni underwent severe austerities during a famine to please Lord Brahma. When Brahma offered Gautama a boon, the sage asked that he would be able to feed all his guests. The boon was granted, and benevolent Gautama fed his many brahmana guests for the duration of the famine. When rains finally came, the brahmanas wanted to leave his hermitage. As is the custom, however, Gautama asked them to stay a little longer, and they agreed. After some time they again wished to leave, but once again Gautama prevailed on them to stay a while longer. This happened a few times. Finally the brahmanas, determined to leave, devised a plan. They made an illusory cow and left it near Gautama's asrama. In the early morning, when the sage was going to bathe, the animal blocked his path, and to drive her away he threw a few drops of water at her. At the first touch of the water, the cow fell down dead. The brahmanas immediately raised a hue and cry, declaring "We cannot stay here and accept food from a cow-killer!" and then they left for their respective residences. Later Gautama performed an atonement, and by his mystic power he could understand that he had been tricked. So he angrily cursed the brahmanas that they would lose all their Vedic knowledge. In this way the Vedic knowledge became covered by ignorance during the Dvapara-yuga, and thus it was necessary for Vyasa to send forth the Vedas again. From Lord Siva's statement that the Puranas are more important than the Vedas because they explain them, we should not conclude that absolutely no one should study the Vedas. Still, Vyasadeva's verdict is that in Kali-yuga people are not intelligent enough to understand the true message of the Vedas, especially since there exists no authentic disciplic succession through which to acquire this understanding. We find, in fact, that those who attempt nowadays to study only the Vedas and Upanisads often end up taking to ordinary, fruitive activities or else to meditation on the impersonal Brahman, with the aim of merging into it. They do not come to the Vaisnava siddhanta, the perfect conclusion of Vedic understanding, which is realization of unalloyed devotional service to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The failure of modern-day students of the Vedas to understand their real message is proof that this message is not easy to discern in the present age. As Lord Krsna says in Srimad-Bhagavatam (11.3.44), paroksa-vado vedo 'yam: "The Vedas speak indirectly." Therefore, if we wish to learn the true conclusion of the Vedas in this age, it is more practical to study the Puranas. However, a serious student who wants to understand the Puranas' siddhanta must still seek out a guru in disciplic succession. This basic prerequisite of Vedic study is not waived when one approaches the Puranas. Indeed, Srimad-Bhagavatam (11.3.21) emphatically declares, tasmad gurum prapadyeta jijïasuh sreya uttamam: "One who seriously wants to learn about the highest good in life must take shelter of a bona fide spiritual master." Next, Srila Jiva Gosvami explains the three divisions of the Puranas.

Furthermore, the Prabhasa-khanda of the Skanda Purana [5.3.121–24] states: "O best of the twice-born, I consider the meaning of the Puranas to be as well established as that of the Vedas. Without doubt all the Vedas are given a firm foundation in them. Once, long ago, the Vedas became afraid of those who might hear from her insufficiently, and she thought, 'This sort of person will distort my meaning.' But then the Itihasas and Puranas helped the Vedas by firmly establishing her meaning. What cannot be found in the Vedas is found in the smrti, and what cannot be found in either is clearly explained in the Puranas. A person is not considered learned if he does not know the Puranas, O learned brahmanas, even if he has studied the four Vedas along with the Vedangas and Upanisads."

Next we must consider the following doubt concerning the status of the Puranas: Although their authority has been thus established [in the previous Texts], still it is difficult for the less intelligent men of the modern age to comprehend their ultimate meaning. The reasons for this difficulty are that the Puranas, like the Vedas, are only partially available and that in general the Puranas try to establish the supremacy of various deities.

As stated in the Matsya Purana [53.65, 68–69]: “A history is called a Purana if it has the five defining characteristics; otherwise it is called an akhyana. The sattvic Puranas primarily glorify Lord Hari; the rajasic Puranas, Lord Brahma; and the tamasic Puranas, Lord Siva and Durga, along with Agni. The Puranas in mixed modes glorify Sarasvati and the Pitas.”

Here the word agni refers to the Vedic sacrifices performed by making offerings into various sacred fires. The word ca (“and”) in the phrase sivasya ca implies the wife of Lord Siva. Sankirnesu (“in the mixed”) means “in the various Puranas in the mixed modes of sattva, rajas, and tamas combined.” Here sarasvatyah (“of Sarasvati”) means “of the presiding deity of speech” and, by implication, “of the various deities referred to in the numerous scriptural texts she embodies.” According to sruti, karmana pitr-lokah: “By fruitive activities one can attain the abode of the forefathers.” Thus here the word pitènam (“of the forefathers”) refers to the fruitive rituals meant for attaining to the planet of the forefathers.

COMMENTARY Three Divisions of the Puranas The verse from the Matsya Purana cited in TEXT 17.3 mentions the five subjects that characterize a Purana. Another verse of the Matsya Purana (53.65) lists those subjects: sargas ca pratisargas ca vamso manvantarani ca vamsyanucaritam caiva puranam païca-laksanam “The five subjects that characterize a Purana are creation, dissolution, genealogy, reigns of Manus, and the activities of famous kings.” Texts 57 and 61 of Sri Tattva-sandarbha discuss these five subjects in detail. In the verses cited above from the Matsya Purana, the word kalpa means “scripture” or “Purana.” This is one of the various meanings of this word, as listed in the Medini Sanskrit dictionary (1.21.2): kalpah sastre vidhau nyaye samvarte brahmane dine. “Kalpa means `scripture,' `rule,' `logic,' `dissolution,' and `day of Brahma.'” The Puranas are divided according to the modes of material nature. The list of the Puranas belonging to each mode is given in the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda (236.18–21): vaisnavam naradiyam ca tatha bhagavatam subham garudam ca tatha padmam varaham subha-darsane sattvikani puranani vijïeyani subhani vai brahmandam brahma-vaivartam markandeyam tathaiva ca

bhavisyam vamanam brahmamrajasani nibodha me matsyam kaurmam tatha laingam saivam skandam tathaiva ca

agneyam ca sad etani tamasani nibodha me "[Lord Siva said:] `O beautiful lady, know that the Visnu, Narada, Bhagavata, Garuda, Padma, and Varaha Puranas are in the mode of goodness, the Brahmanda, Brahma-vaivarta, Markandeya, Bhavisya, Vamana, and Brahma Puranas are in the mode of passion, and the Matsya, Kurma, Linga, Siva, Skanda, and Agni Puranas are in the mode of ignorance.'" The verses Srila Jiva cites from the Skanda Purana imply that the Puranas are as good as the Vedas and should be accepted as such by anyone who accepts the Vedas' authority. There are many commentaries on the Vedas, but the Puranas are the natural COMMENTARY because they were compiled by the Vedas' compiler, Srila Vyasa. Therefore one can understand the message of the Vedas by studying the Puranas alone, even without directly studying the Vedas. But study of the Vedas is incomplete in this age without study of the Puranas; therefore studying the Puranas is even more appropriate and practical for us than studying the Vedas. Furthermore, the statement from the Skanda Purana quoted in TEXT 17.1—that no one can become learned without studying the Puranas—suggests that the Puranas are also more important than the Itihasas. But just as we meet with difficulties in studying the Vedas in this age, we also encounter difficulties in studying the Puranas. The eighteen major Puranas and eighteen minor ones constitute a vast body of literature, and there are no current disciplic successions or authentic commentaries for most of these works. Portions of some Puranas are not available, and other Puranas have variant readings and interpolations. As with the Vedas, independent study of the Puranas yields no clear conclusion, because each Purana seems to establish a different deity as the supreme. The Siva Purana proclaims Lord Siva supreme, the Visnu Purana, Lord Visnu, and so on. The result is confusion for one who studies them without proper guidance. Such a student will not know whether to worship Siva, Visnu, Devi, or some other deity. Srila Jiva Gosvami gives the solution to this problem in the next Text.

This being the case[—that Puranas are in various modes of nature—]the Matsya Purana classifies them in three divisions based on the stories found in them. But how can we determine the relative importance of the Puranas so that we can then learn about the other subjects under discussion, namely, sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana? If we use the three modes of nature as the basis for categorizing the Puranas, depending on such statements as “the mode of goodness produces knowledge” [Bg. 14.17] and “the mode of goodness leads to realization of the Absolute Truth” [Bhag. 1.2.24], we will conclude that the Puranas and other such literature in the mode of goodness are superior means for gaining knowledge of the Absolute Truth.

But even then, how can we reconcile the different inconclusive views regarding the Absolute Truth that the various Puranas put forward? Someone may propose study of the Vedanta-sutra as the solution, claiming that Bhagavan Vyasadeva compiled the Vedanta-sutra to present the decisive conclusion of both the Vedas and the Puranas concerning the Absolute Truth.

But then the followers of sages who wrote other sutras may be dissatisfied. Moreover, since the aphorisms of the Vedanta are terse and extremely esoteric, and since they are also subject to varying interpretations, someone will always express a contrary idea about their meaning. What, then, can resolve disputes concerning the Vedanta-sutra?

tad evam samadheyam yady ekatamam eva purana-laksanam apauruseyam sastram sarva-vedetihasa-puranam artha-saram brahma-sutropajivyam ca bhavad bhuvi sampurnam pracarad-rupam syat. satyam uktam. yata eva ca sarva-pramananam cakravarti-bhutam asmad-abhimatam Srimad-bhagavatam evodbhavitam bhavata. This problem could be solved if there were one scripture that had the characteristics of a Purana, that had no human origin, that presented the essence of all the Vedas, Itihasas, and Puranas, that was based on the Vedanta-sutra, and that was available throughout the land in its complete form. Well said, sir, because you have reminded us about our revered Srimad-Bhagavatam, the emperor of all pramanas.

COMMENTARY Srimad-Bhagavatam Is the Best of All Puranas The Matsya Purana, Chapter 53, gives the number of verses in each Purana and describes the benefits of donating each one on special days. In that same chapter Suta Gosvami speaks two and a half verses containing a formula for dividing the Puranas into three classes according to which one of the three modes of nature predominates. These three classes of Purana glorify various deities, and commentators often try to establish their own favorite among these deities as supreme, arguing on the basis of logic and apparently conclusive scriptural references. One consequence of this partiality is that commentators tend to denigrate Puranas in a category different from their own: proponents of tamasic Puranas tend to reject the authority of the rajasic and sattvic Puranas, and proponents of rajasic and sattvic Puranas likewise reject the Puranas outside their group. But there cannot actually be several Absolute Truths; therefore the question of which Puranic deity is the one Supreme Truth remains to be settled. For the unbiased seeker of the truth, Srila Jiva Gosvami shows how to resolve the matter. He explains that sattva, or the mode of goodness, is clearly superior to passion and ignorance, as Lord Krsna confirms in the Bhagavad-gita (14.17): sattvat saïjayate jïanam rajaso lobha eva ca pramada-mohau tamaso bhavato ’jïanam eva ca “From the mode of goodness, real knowledge develops; from the mode of passion, greed develops; and from the mode of ignorance develop foolishness, madness, and illusion.” Srimad-Bhagavatam (1.2.24) also states, tamasas tu rajas tasmat sattvam yad brahma-darsanam: “Passion is better than ignorance, but goodness is best because it can lead to realization of the Absolute Truth.” In the passage where this verse appears, Suta Gosvami is explaining which form of worship produces the ultimate good. His opinion is that one can achieve the ultimate good only by worshiping Lord Krsna, the personification of pure goodness. The citation from the Matsya Purana in the previous TEXT states that the sattvic Puranas glorify Lord Hari, Krsna. By contrast, the rajasic and tamasic Puranas recommend worship of other deities. Such worship is in the lower modes of nature and does not lead to realization of the Absolute Truth. Thus one can tell the modal quality of a Purana by seeing which deity it recommends for worship. Another way to tell is by seeing how it opens. In a sattvic Purana the questioner will approach a learned speaker and inquire from him about the Absolute Truth. In this vein the questioner may ask the speaker to elaborate on the nature of ultimate reality, the supreme religion for all, the ultimate benefit a human being can aspire for, how one should prepare for death, and so on. These questions allow the Purana's speaker full freedom to explain these topics; as a self-realized teacher, free from all gross and subtle material desires and concerned only with the welfare of the inquirer and those who will hear the discourse, either then or in the future, the speaker replies with answers that are specific and unambiguous, leaving no room for misinterpretation or confusion. Examples of such sattvic Puranas include the Padma Purana, the Visnu Purana, and, most prominently, the Bhagavata Purana, or Srimad-Bhagavatam. In the rajasic and tamasic Puranas, however, the questioners inquire about limited topics, those that do not address the ultimate concerns of life. In the Linga Purana, for example, the sages at Naimisaranya ask Suta Gosvami to narrate the glory of Linga, Lord Siva. Although Suta Gosvami has fully realized the Absolute Truth and is perfectly competent to explain it, the questions here restrict him to speaking on the particular topic of Linga. He is not free to explain the deeper meaning of life. Since all rajasic and tamasic Puranas have this shortcoming, they cannot be reliable sources of knowledge about the essential topics of sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana. The Puranas were arranged in different modes in response to the various desires and interests of the conditioned souls. Nevertheless, every Purana contains glorification of Lord Hari, the Absolute Truth. Srila Veda-vyasa included this glorification so that even persons in the lower material modes can gradually develop interest in the Supreme Personality of Godhead by hearing or reading the tamasic and rajasic Puranas. Someone might object that the statement cited above concerning the classification of the Puranas according to the modes does not itself come from a sattvic Purana and so should not be taken as authoritative. We reply that this classification is supported by numerous other statements as well, including some from such sattvic scriptures as the Padma Purana, which we have already cited in the previous Text. Nor is it true that the Puranas in the lower modes give no valid knowledge at all, since even they give some insight into absolute reality, what to speak of the insights they give into lesser topics. In addition, no statement in the Vedic literature specifically contradicts the verses cited here classifying the Puranas according to the modes of nature, and so we are left with no compelling reason to doubt the authenticity of this classification. From this analysis we can conclude that in our quest for the ultimate sabda-pramana we need consider only the sattvic Puranas. As the Padma Purana states, sattvika moksa-dah proktah: “The Puranas in the mode of goodness lead to liberation.” But even these sattvic Puranas have been understood in many ways by great thinkers. Some interpreters have found that they glorify the path of yoga as the best, others have concluded that they recommend bhakti as the highest path, and yet others have found that they promote the path of jïana (knowledge) as supreme. Next Srila Jiva Gosvami suggests the Vedanta-sutra as a possible basis of reconciliation. The Vedanta-sutra, written by Vyasadeva, certainly incorporates the essential understanding of the Vedas and the Puranas. But we must also consider that the dedicated followers of other sages who wrote philosophical sutras, such as Gautama and Pataïjali, might not accept the Vedanta-sutra’s ideas. Even if these followers of other philosophers could somehow be convinced to change their minds by logical proof of the greater authority of the Vedanta-sutra, the situation is still problematic: The sutras of the Vedanta being terse and esoteric, acaryas of various persuasions have commented on them, and so it is difficult to decide whose opinion agrees with that of Srila Veda-vyasa, the author. For the seeker who has come this far along the way but finds himself sinking in the marshy confusion created by the various scriptures and their myriad commentators, Srila Jiva Gosvami finally points out the high ground of the Srimad-Bhagavatam. The Bhagavatam has the ten characteristics of a major Purana (discussed in TEXT 56); it is apauruseya; it is the natural COMMENTARY on the Vedanta-sutra and thus constitutes the purport of all the Vedas, Itihasas, and Puranas; it is available in its entirety; it is respected by all Vaisnava acaryas, and also many others; it is the most popular of the Puranas; it has an intact tradition of Vaisnava commentaries; and it is the culmination of Srila Veda-vyasa’s literary output, composed in His maturity. By establishing Srimad-Bhagavatam as the last word in Vedic scripture, Srila Jiva Gosvami fulfills the will of Lord Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, who accepted the Bhagavatam as “the spotless Purana,” the supremely authoritative text. In the next TEXT Jiva Gosvami explains that Srimad-Bhagavatam has not been composed by a mortal and that it is the natural COMMENTARY on the Vedanta-sutra.

Indeed, Lord Vyasa was not satisfied even after compiling all the Puranas and the Vedanta-sutra. He therefore wrote Srimad-Bhagavatam, which was revealed to Him in trance, as the natural COMMENTARY on His own sutras. In Srimad-Bhagavatam we find the consistent reconciliation of all scriptures. That the Bhagavatam gives the essence of all scriptures is shown by its opening with the Gayatri mantra, the essential TEXT incorporating the message of all the Vedas.

This Purana has eighteen thousand verses. Whoever writes out a copy of Srimad-Bhagavatam, places it on a golden lion-throne, and presents it to someone on the full-moon day of the month of Bhadra (August-September) will attain the supreme goal.”

Here the word gayatri indicates the meaning of the Gayatri mantra, which includes the word dhimahi. Dhimahi is an indicator of Gayatri, implying its purport; it would be improper to directly utter Gayatri itself, the origin of all Vedic mantras. The first verse of Srimad-Bhagavatam [1.1.1] alludes to the meaning of Gayatri by the phrases janmady asya yatah ("by Him this universe is created, maintained, and destroyed") and tene brahma hrda ("He revealed Vedic knowledge in the heart"). These phrases express the same meaning as Gayatri, describing the Lord as the basis of all the universes and as He who inspires everyone's intellect. The word dharma in the compound dharma-vistara refers to the supreme religion, as expressed in the Bhagavatam's words dharmah projjhita-kaitavo 'tra paramah [Bhag. 1.1.2]: "the supreme religion, devoid of all cheating propensities." And, as will become clear in upcoming Texts, this dharma is indeed characterized by meditation on the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

COMMENTARY Srimad-Bhagavatam Is the Natural COMMENTARY on the Vedanta-sutra Srimad-Bhagavatam contains the story of its own appearance as the crowning achievement of Srila Vyasadeva's literary efforts. First Srila Vyasadeva arranged the four Vedas, and then He composed the great epic Mahabharata for the benefit of women, sudras, and others who cannot study the Vedas. Next He compiled the Puranas, the natural COMMENTARY on the Vedas, and then He provided the essence of the Vedas and Puranas in His Vedanta-sutra. But even after all this literary output, Veda-vyasa felt discontented, although He did not know why. Then His spiritual master, Narada Muni, came to His rescue: krtavan bharatam yas tvam sarvartha-paribrmhitam "Your inquiries were full and your studies were also well fulfilled, and there is no doubt that you have prepared a great and wonderful work, the Mahabharata, which is full of all kinds of Vedic sequences elaborately explained" (Bhag. 1.5.3). yatha dharmadayas cartha muni-varyanukirtitah na tatha vasudevasya mahima hy anuvarnitah "Although, great sage, you have very broadly described the four principles beginning with religious performances, you have not in the same way described the glories of the Supreme Personality, Vasudeva" (Bhag. 1.5.9). Following Narada Muni's instruction, Srila Vyasa meditated, and while He was in trance Srimad-Bhagavatam was revealed to Him. Thus it is clear that Srimad-Bhagavatam, which gave solace to Vyasadeva, is knowledge descended from the transcendental realm. In upcoming Texts Sri Jiva will show that it is also the natural COMMENTARY on the Vedanta-sutra. Various Puranas mention the relationship between Srimad-Bhagavatam and the Gayatri mantra. Considered the essence of the Vedas, Gayatri is supposed to be recited at dawn, noon, and dusk by every twice-born person (brahmana, ksatriya, and vaisya). According to Sridhara Svami in his Bhavartha-dipika, Srimad-Bhagavatam begins with the Gayatri mantra. Commenting on the first verse of the Bhagavatam, he writes, dhimahiti gayatrya prarambhena ca gayatry-akhya-brahma-vidya-rupam etat puranam iti darsitam: "That the Gayatri phrase indicated by the word dhimahi begins this Purana shows that this work has the nature of the brahma-vidya [Vedic knowledge of the Supreme] called Gayatri." Because Srimad-Bhagavatam is based on Gayatri, the cream of the Vedas, it explains the topmost principles of religion. The Bhagavatam (1.1.3) thus calls itself "the ripened fruit of the wish-fulfilling tree of the Vedas" (nigama-kalpa-taror galitam phalam). The recitation of Gayatri and other Vedic mantras is governed by strict rules regarding the person, time, and place, and also the purity of the chanter, but such restrictions do not apply to Srimad-Bhagavatam. Since anyone may read the Bhagavatam, strictly speaking it would be improper for the Gayatri mantra to appear there in its original form. Gayatri is among the Vedic mantras, which only the twice-born are allowed to chant. That is why Srila Vyasadeva expressed the form and idea of Gayatri in the Bhagavatam without using the actual mantra. Only one word from Gayatri, dhimahi, has been kept to indicate his intention, because it is a compulsory word in the mantra and carries its essence. Another reason Vyasa did not write the original Gayatri in Srimad-Bhagavatam is that doing so would have invited misinterpretation. Various schools of thought have explained Gayatri differently—as a meditation on impersonal Brahman, on the sun, on the fire-god, on Lord Siva, and so forth. Only rarely is it understood to be a meditation on the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Vasudeva. But in Srimad-Bhagavatam, Srila Vyasadeva's own COMMENTARY on the Vedanta-sutra, Vyasadeva delivers the complete and unambiguous meaning of Gayatri in the opening verse. He reveals that Gayatri is a meditation on the Supreme Personality of Godhead and His eternal consort, Sri Radhika. This meditation is indeed the highest dharma. In the 105th TEXT of Sri Paramatma-sandarbha, Srila Jiva Gosvami will explain the Gayatri mantra in detail, and in the Krsna-sandarbha he will thoroughly analyze the Bhagavatam's first verse and show it to be a meditation on Sri Sri Radha-Krsna. In the next TEXT of the Tattva-sandarbha, Srila Jiva Gosvami further introduces the Srimad-Bhagavatam, describing its distinguishing features and supporting his statements with scriptural references.

In the Skanda Purana, Prabhasa-khanda [7.1.2.39–42] we find a description of Srimad-Bhagavatam similar to the one in the Matsya Purana: “The Purana known as Srimad-Bhagavatam recounts the deeds of humans and demigods in the Sarasvata-kalpa, explains the supreme religion in terms of Gayatri, and narrates the slaying of Vrtrasura. It has eighteen thousand verses.<193>Whoever writes out a copy of the Bhagavatam, places it on a golden lion-throne, and presents it to someone on the full-moon day of the month of Bhadra will attain the supreme destination.” These verses are also found in the Agni Purana [272.6–7].

Yet another Purana, cited by the Bhagavatam commentator Sridhara Svami, describes the characteristics of Srimad-Bhagavatam thus: “The Purana known as Srimad-Bhagavatam has eighteen thousand verses divided into twelve cantos, begins with Gayatri, describes the Hayagriva-brahma-vidya, and narrates the slaying of Vrtrasura."

The Hayagriva-brahma-vidya mentioned here (meaning "the doctrine of the Supreme taught by Hayagriva"), is "The Armor of Narayana" (Narayana-varma), since it is narrated in the same con TEXT as the killing of Vrtra. The word haya-griva here refers to Dadhici, the sage with a horse's head. He taught the knowledge of Brahman called Narayana-varma. His accepting a horse's head and receiving the name Asvasira ("horse-headed one") are mentioned in Srimad-Bhagavatam's Sixth Canto [6.9.52], where these words are spoken: "he who has the name Asvasira." From a verse Sridhara Svami cites in his COMMENTARY on this Bhagavatam TEXT we get further confirmation that the Narayana-varma is in fact a standard teaching about the Absolute: "Upon hearing this and feeling honored, Dadhici, anxious not to break his promise, instructed the twin Asvini-kumaras in the knowledge of the Pravargya sacrifice and Brahma-vidya."

As stated in the Padma Purana, in Gautama Rsi's question to Maharaja Ambarisa, "O lord of the earth, do you recite the Bhagavata Purana before the Deity of Lord Hari, especially the history of the king of the demons, Prahlada Maharaja?" (Padma Pur., Uttara-khanda 22.115). Again in the Padma Purana, Gautama further instructs Ambarisa, in the section glorifying the vow of Vaïjuli Maha-dvadasi: "One should stay awake throughout that night and hear scriptures that narrate stories of Lord Visnu and His devotees, especially Bhagavad-gita, the thousand names of Lord Visnu, and the Purana narrated by Sukadeva [Srimad-Bhagavatam]. One should recite these with care, since they are pleasing to Lord Hari."

COMMENTARY The Characteristics of Srimad-Bhagavatam In this TEXT Jiva Gosvami gives special attention to establishing that the Bhagavatam glorified in the Puranas is Srimad-Bhagavatam. He does this because some scholars of his time held that the Devi Bhagavatam, rather than Srimad-Bhagavatam, was actually the Bhagavatam glorified in the Puranas. Like Srimad-Bhagavatam, the Devi Bhagavatam is a Purana with twelve cantos, 18,000 verses, and an account of Vrtrasura’s death, although its account of how Vrtra was killed differs from the one in Srimad-Bhagavatam. Also, when some traditional scholars read in the Puranas that on the full-moon day of the month of Bhadra one should donate the Bhagavatam mounted on a golden lion (hema-simha), they take this to mean the Devi Bhagavatam. This seems quite fitting, since Devi, or Durga, rides on a lion. (In the case of Srimad-Bhagavatam, hema-simha is understood to mean “golden lion-throne.”) Srila Jiva Gosvami solves the controversy by citing references that list distinctive features of Srimad-Bhagavatam: it begins with the Gayatri mantra, it contains the Hayagriva-brahma-vidya, it narrates events that happened in the Sarasvata-kalpa, and it was first spoken by Sri Sukadeva Gosvami to Pariksit Maharaja. Jiva Gosvami further supports his opinion by quoting from the Bhavartha-dipika, Sridhara Svami’s COMMENTARY on Srimad-Bhagavatam. The Devi Bhagavatam opens with a statement that appears to be based on Gayatri: om sarva-caitanya-rupam tam adyam vidyam ca dhimahi, buddhim ya nah pracodayat. There are two reasons this statement should not be equated with Gayatri: First, nothing in it corresponds to the words savituh, varenyam, and bhargas from Gayatri. (By contrast, in Srimad-Bhagavatam 1.1.1 there is such a correspondence.). Second, this statement is a meditation on Devi, but as Sri Jiva will show in the next Text, the object of meditation in Gayatri is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Visnu. Like Srimad-Bhagavatam, the Devi Bhagavatam narrates the killing of Vrtrasura, but in its account Indra kills Vrtra with ocean foam empowered by Devi. Vrtrasura performed severe penances for hundreds of years to please Lord Brahma. When

Brahma appeared before him and offered a boon, Vrtra asked that he would not be slain by any weapon made of iron or wood, or one that was dry or wet. After Lord Brahma granted this boon, Vrtra attacked Indra and defeated him. Indra subsequently took help from Lord Visnu, who entered Indra's thunderbolt and also advised him to take the help of Devi and make a truce with Vrtra. Indra then apparently befriended Vrtrasura. But one day at dusk Indra surprised Vrtrasura on a beach and slew him with his thunderbolt covered with foam, which was not a weapon of iron or wood and was neither wet nor dry. The Devi Bhagavatam also makes no mention of the Hayagriva-brahma-vidya (the Narayana-varma). For all these reasons it is clear that the Bhagavatam referred to in the verse cited by Sridhara Svami is not the Devi Bhagavatam. Hemadri, Ballal Sena, Govindananda, Raghunandana, Gopala Bhatta Gosvami, and Sanatana Gosvami have each written noteworthy dharma-sastras (books and essays on religious duties), in which they quote frequently from Srimad-Bhagavatam but never from the Devi Bhagavatam. Ballal Sena states in his Dana-sagara that only a few verses of Srimad-Bhagavatam specifically recommend acts of charity. In contrast, the entire thirtieth chapter of the Devi Bhagavatam's Ninth Canto deals exclusively with the glory of giving various kinds of charity. In addition, with the exceptions of Ramanujacarya and Nilakanthacarya, all the great saintly commentators on Prasthana-trayi either wrote about Srimad-Bhagavatam directly or at least cited it as a standard reference in their books. By contrast, neither Sankara, Madhvacarya, Vallabha, Lord Caitanyadeva, or any other notable acarya ever cited the Devi Bhagavatam to support or prove any important statement. The ninety-sixth chapter of the first part of the Naradiya Purana lists the topics of all twelve cantos of the Bhagavatam in order. This list fits Srimad-Bhagavatam but not the Devi Bhagavatam. And the Padma Purana (Uttara-khanda 193.3), states: puranesu tu sarvesu Srimad-bhagavatam param yatra prati-padam krsno giyate bahudharsibhih "Among all the Puranas, Srimad-Bhagavatam is the best. In every line great sages glorify Lord Krsna in various ways." All this leaves no doubt that the Bhagavatam mentioned in the quoted Puranic verses is Srimad-Bhagavatam. Srimad-Bhagavatam and other Puranas mention a demon named Hayagriva, and there is also an incarnation of Lord Visnu called Hayagriva, who had a horse's head. But because the Hayagriva mentioned in this section of Tattva-sandarbha is connected with the slaying of the demon Vrtra, Srila Jiva Gosvami has identified him as the sage Dadhici. As told in the Sixth Canto of Srimad-Bhagavatam, after Vrtra had conquered the demigods they approached Lord Visnu for help. The Lord advised the chief of the demigods, Indra, to go to Dadhici and ask him for his body, which had been made firm by vows, penances, and knowledge of Brahman. The Lord told Indra to fashion from Dadhici's bones a thunderbolt strong enough to kill Vrtrasura. Dadhici had previously taught the knowledge of Brahman to the Asvini Kumara twins, although Indra had earlier forbidden him to teach them transcendental knowledge on the grounds that their medical profession disqualified them from learning it. Indra had threatened to behead Dadhici if he disobeyed, but Dadhici had already promised to teach the twins. The Asvini- Kumaras had solved Dadhici's dilemma surgically: they severed his head and grafted a horse's head in its place, knowing that Indra would eventually cut off that head and enable them to restore Dadhici's original head. Dadhici then instructed them through the horse's head. Dadhici became known as Hayagriva or Asvasira ("horse-headed one"), and the transcendental knowledge he imparted became famous as the Hayagriva-brahma-vidya. As planned, Indra later severed Dadhici's horse head and the Asvini Kumaras restored his original head. Then, on the request of the demigods, Dadhici offered his body to Indra, who used his bones to make a thunderbolt with which he killed Vrtrasura. Earlier Dadhici had taught Tvasta the same knowledge he had previously taught the Asvini Kumaras, and Tvasta in turn taught it to his son Visvarupa. Visvarupa taught it to Lord Indra as the Narayana Armor, which helped Indra defeat Vrtrasura. Thus the Hayagriva referred to here is Dadhici, and the Brahma-vidya is the Narayana Armor. This is all described in the Sixth Canto of Srimad-Bhagavatam and in the Bhagavatam commentaries of the Vaisnava acaryas.

Padma Purana (Uttara-khanda 198.30) confirms, Srimad-bhagavatakhyo 'yam pratyaksah krsna eva hi: "Without a doubt Srimad-Bhagavatam is directly Lord Krsna." That Srimad-Bhagavatam is nondifferent from Lord Krsna is confirmed in the Bhagavatam itself (1.3.43), where Suta Gosvami states that after the Lord's disappearance the Bhagavatam appeared as His representative to enlighten the benighted people of Kali-yuga. The Padma Purana also confirms the oneness of the Bhagavatam and the Lord with this passage equating the Bhagavatam's cantos with Krsna's limbs: @vpl1 = padau yadiyau prathama-dvitiyau @vpl2 = trtiya-turyau kathitau yad-uru @vpl1 = nabhis tatha païcama eva sastho @vpl2 = bhujantaram dor-yugalam tathanyau @vpl1 = namami devam karuna-nidhanam @vpl2 = tamala-varnam su-hitavataram @vpl1 = apara-samsara-samudra-setum @vpl2 = bhajamahe bhagavata-svarupam "The Bhagavatam's First and Second Cantos are Lord Krsna's feet, and the Third and Fourth Cantos are His thighs. The Fifth Canto is His navel, the Sixth Canto is His chest, and the Seventh and Eighth Cantos are His arms. The Ninth Canto is His throat, the Tenth His blooming lotus face, the Eleventh His forehead, and the Twelfth His head. "I bow down to that Lord, the ocean of mercy, whose color is like that of a tamala tree and who appears in this world for the welfare of all. I worship Him as the bridge for crossing the unfathomable ocean of material existence. Srimad-Bhagavatam has appeared as His very self." Next Srila Jiva Gosvami demonstrates that Srimad-Bhagavatam is the natural COMMENTARY on the Vedanta-sutra.

@vpl1 = kanthas tu rajan navamo yadiyo @vpl2 = mukharavindam dasamam praphullam @vpl1 = ekadaso yas ca lalata-pattam @vpl2 = siro 'pi yad dvadasa eva bhati

It is the natural COMMENTARY on the Vedanta-sutra, it establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata, it is a COMMENTARY on Gayatri, it explains and expands the meaning of the Vedas, it is the Sama Veda of the Puranas, and it was spoken by the Supreme Lord Himself. It has twelve cantos, hundreds of chapters, and eighteen thousand verses."

Here the words brahma-sutranam arthah mean that Srimad-Bhagavatam is the natural COMMENTARY on the Vedanta-sutra. First the Bhagavatam appeared in the heart of Sri Vyasadeva in a subtle form. He then summarized it in the form of the Vedanta-sutra, and later He expanded it into Srimad-Bhagavatam as we know it. Since the Vedanta-sutra already has a natural COMMENTARY in Srimad-Bhagavatam, whatever else more recent commentators have produced from their own brains should be taken seriously only when it is faithful to the version of Srimad-Bhagavatam.

Concerning the phrase bharatartha-vinirnayah ("Srimad-Bhagavatam establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata"), we find the following verses describing the Mahabharata's importance in the Mahabharata itself [Adi-parva 1.272–74]: "The Mahabharata is glorified because it contains the conclusions of all scriptures. Long ago, on the request of Srila Vyasa, Lord Brahma and the other demigods came together with all the great sages and placed the Mahabharata on one side of a scale and the entire Vedas on the other. The Mahabharata, it turned out, weighed more because of its greatness (mahattva) and heaviness (bhara-vattva). For this reason it is called Maha-bharata." The message of the Mahabharata, whose importance is as described here, is made clear in the TEXT of Srimad-Bhagavatam.

Another way in which Srimad-Bhagavatam establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata is that the message of both culminates in the Supreme Lord alone. That the Mahabharata's message culminates in the Lord is evinced in the Narayaniya section of the Mahabharata's Moksa-dharma portion [170.11–14], where Janamejaya says to Srila Vyasadeva: "O brahmana, abode of austerities, just as butter can be extracted from yogurt, sandalwood from the Malaya mountains, the Upanisads from the Vedas, and life-giving nectar from herbs, so by Your churning the ocean of the highest knowledge with the rod of Your intelligence, this Narayaniya has been extracted from the Mahabharata's hundred thousand verses. The Narayaniya's narrations are related to Lord Narayana and are sweet like nectar."

COMMENTARY Srimad-Bhagavatam Is the Natural COMMENTARY on the Vedanta-sutra Srimad-Bhagavatam is one of the eighteen Puranas, but Srila Vyasadeva wrote it after compiling the essence of the Vedas in the Vedanta-sutra and also composing the Mahabharata and Puranas. But, one might ask, if the eighteen Puranas had already been compiled, does this make Srimad-Bhagavatam the nineteenth Purana? In TEXT 21.2 Srila Jiva Gosvami explains that this is not the case. Srimad-Bhagavatam appeared first to Srila Vyasa in a concise and subtle form, as one of the eighteen Puranas. Srila Vyasa composed the Vedanta-sutra on the basis of this first edition of the Bhagavatam. Later, when He sat in trance in pursuance of Narada Muni's order, the expanded form of Srimad-Bhagavatam was revealed to Him as the natural COMMENTARY on the Vedanta-sutra. Srimad-Bhagavatam and the Vedanta-sutra share the same subject, the Absolute Truth, and they describe the same principles of sambandha (the relationship between the soul and God), abhidheya (the process of attaining the supreme goal), and prayojana (the supreme goal, perfect devotion to the Lord). Many acaryas and scholars wrote later commentaries on the Vedanta-sutra, but only those that agree with Srimad-Bhagavatam—such as those given by Ramanujacarya, Madhvacarya, and Baladeva Vidyabhusana—are bona fide. Suta Gosvami alludes to Veda-vyasa's composing two editions of Srimad-Bhagavatam: sa samhitam bhagavatim krtvanukramya catmajam sukam adhyapayam asa nivrtti-niratam munih "The great sage Vyasadeva, after compiling Srimad-Bhagavatam and revising it, taught it to His own son, Sri Sukadeva Gosvami, who was already absorbed in self-realization" (Bhag. 1.7.8). Commenting on this verse, Srila Visvanatha Cakravarti Thakura writes, atas tadaiva purva-nirmitasyaiva Sri-bhagavatasyanukramanam: "The word anukramya in this verse means that Veda-vyasa compiled a new edition of the already existing Srimad-Bhagavatam."

TEXT 21.3 relates how the Mahabharata was once shown to be literally heavier than the Vedas. This heaviness came about because the Mahabharata, using simple narrations, elaborated upon and lucidly explained the concise and cryptic subject matter of the Vedas. Vyasadeva makes this point in the Mahabharata itself (Adi-parva 1.62): brahman veda-rahasyam ca yac canyat sthapitam maya sangopanisadam caiva vedanam vistara-kriya "O Lord Brahma, in this great work [Mahabharata] I have included the secret essence of all the Vedas and of all other scriptures as well. It explains in detail the Vedas' six corollaries and the Upanisads." Originally the Mahabharata had six million verses, but at present only one hundred thousand are available on earth. The rest can be found on higher planets, where people have life spans and memories suitable for absorbing such large amounts of information. The distribution of the Mahabharata's verses is also

pitrye païcadasa proktam gandharvesu caturdasa ekam sata-sahasram tu manusesu pratisthitam “Then Srila Vyasadeva compiled another samhita [Mahabharata], containing six million verses. Of these, three million are present in the heavenly planets, one and a half million on the planet of the forefathers, and one million four hundred thousand on the planet of the Gandharvas. The remaining one hundred thousand verses are available among human beings.” Although abridged, the version of Mahabharata on this planet is the longest epic ever written here. So, due to the profundity of its topics (mahattva) and its great weight (bhara-vattva) it is known as Mahabharata. The Mahabharata is more versatile than the Vedas because the restrictions that apply to studying the Vedas are absent with the Mahabharata. Anyone may read and enjoy the Mahabharata, regardless of social position or gender. However, only the Moksa-dharma and a few other sections of the Mahabharata directly glorify Lord Narayana as supreme. Other sections mainly deal with a mixture of topics, such as fruitive rituals, politics, and charity. By contrast, the entire Bhagavatam speaks only about the glories of the Supreme Lord, and this exclusive focus makes it superior to the Mahabharata. Thus it has been said, “Srimad-Bhagavatam establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata.” In the next Text, Srila Jiva Gosvami cites further proof that the Bhagavatam is the essence of all Vedic literature and the topmost pramana.

Similarly, the Third Canto of Srimad-Bhagavatam [3.5.12] confirms [that the Bhagavatam establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata]: “Your friend, the great sage Krsna-dvaipayana Vyasa, has already described the transcendental qualities of the Lord in His great work the Mahabharata. But the whole idea is to draw the attention of the mass of people to krsna-katha through their strong affinity for hearing mundane topics.”

In his

Catur-varga-cintamani, Vrata-khanda [1.28], Hemadri cites the following verse and attributes it to Srimad-Bhagavatam: “Out of compassion, the great sage thought it wise to do something that would enable even those who were ignorant of how to act for their own welfare to achieve the ultimate goal of life. Thus He compiled the great historical narration called the Mahabharata for women, laborers, and friends of the twice-born because they do not have access to the Vedas” [Bhag. 1.4.25]. Hemadri uses this verse to demonstrate that the Mahabharata is as valuable as the Vedas, and thus the phrase bharatartha-vinirnayah (“Srimad-Bhagavatam establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata”) should be explained, in accordance with this view, as saying that Srimad-Bhagavatam is the literature in which the Mahabharata’s message is conclusively defined and is shown to be equal to that of the Vedas.

Since the book named Srimad-Bhagavatam, characterized as “beginning with the Gayatri mantra,” is thus dedicated to the Personality of Godhead, it serves as a COMMENTARY on Gayatri, which is also dedicated to the Supreme Lord. This same point—that Srimad-Bhagavatam is a COMMENTARY on the Gayatri mantra—is made in such statements as “in which [Bhagavatam] Gayatri is introduced as the basis of discussion.”

And furthermore, the Agni Purana describes the Personality of Godhead at length in the course of its exposition of the Gayatri mantra. Here is a short summary of this explanation from the Agni Purana: “That light is called the Supreme Brahman because the word bhargas [in Gayatri] means ‘effulgence,’” [Agni Pur. 216.3]. Then Agni says: “That effulgence is Lord Visnu, who is the cause of the universe’s creation, maintenance, and dissolution. Some people say ‘effulgence’ here refers instead to Siva, while others say it means Sakti. Others say it refers to the sun, and still others to Agni. While chanting Gayatri, the brahmanas who perform Vedic fire sacrifices (Agni-hotris) worship various demigods. But Lord Visnu is present in the forms of Agni and all the other demigods, and the Vedas praise Him as the Absolute Truth, Brahman”

[Agni Pur. 216.7–8].

Later, while commenting on the opening verse of the Bhagavatam (beginning janmady asya), we will again present this idea of the Bhagavatam's being a COMMENTARY on Gayatri. Also, in one of the concluding verses of the Bhagavatam ([12.13.19,] beginning kasmai yena vibhasitah), we find the phrase tac chuddham ("it is pure"), which is exactly echoed in the Agni Purana's explanation of Gayatri: "For liberation, let us meditate on the Supreme Brahman, who is eternal, pure, transcendental, and always effulgent, and who is the supreme controller, and as we meditate let us think, 'I am that light, the Supreme Truth'" [Agni Pur. 216.6]. Here the mood of thinking "I am one with Brahman" is meant to help the meditator become fit to worship the Supreme Lord, following the principle "One who is not godly cannot properly worship God." The verb form dhyayema ("we should meditate") signifies that "not only I but all of us should meditate."

According to this view, however, the word bharga in the Gayatri mantra should end with the vowel a, making the original word bharga instead of bhargas. This irregular usage of bhargas where bharga might be expected can be explained as an instance of the type given in Panini-sutra 7.1.39, which is intended for the analysis of Vedic texts. The sutra is supam su-luk, which means that the suffix -am of a singular accusative case may be replaced by -su. In the prose section of the Bhagavatam's Twelfth Canto ([12.6.67–72,] beginning om namas te) the sun is praised as the object of worship in Gayatri. We should understand that this passage refers to the Supersoul residing within the sun rather than to the sun independently; interpreted in this way, the statement is faultless.

Later in the Bhagavatam Saunaka Rsi confirms this interpretation: "O Suta, kindly explain to us, who are faithful, the glory of Lord Hari's expansion as the Supersoul within the sun" [Bhag. 12.11.28]. Similarly, one should not think that the word bharga ("effulgence") in Gayatri refers only to the controller of the sun globe, since the word varenya ("transcendental") in the Gayatri mantra and the word para in the Bhagavatam verses cited above [1.1.1 and 12.13.19] have both been shown to refer ultimately to the transcendental opulence of the Supreme.

The Agni Purana similarly states: "One may further meditate on this Supreme Lord as present in the sun, but the final goal of life is Lord Visnu's abode, which alone is the eternal and ever-auspicious Absolute Truth" [Agni Pur. 216.16]. The meaning of this verse is as follows: The Personality of Godhead should be meditated upon as the Supersoul, or inner controller, dwelling within the sun globe, where He appears so that the inhabitants of the three worlds may worship Him. This sun globe will be destroyed at the time of dissolution, but the transcendental abode of Lord Visnu, Maha-vaikuntha, is permanent, unchanging in the past, present, and future. It is also always auspicious—that is, free from all disturbance—because it is identical with the Supreme Lord's own self.

After explaining Gayatri in this way, the Agni Purana further elaborates on Gayatri in the section dealing with the characteristics of Puranas, which contains the verse beginning yatra adhikrtya gayatrim. Thus we say: "The Agni Purana explains that the Gayatri mantra is dedicated to the Personality of Godhead, the source of the universe's maintenance, dissolution, and other phases of existence. Srimad-Bhagavatam, characterized by the phrase ‘taking Gayatri as its topic,’ is thus ever-glorious all over the earth.” And so we have shown how it is that the beginning of this scripture [Srimad-Bhagavatam] refers to Gayatri as its subject.

Still, the statement made earlier—that the Bhagavatam’s subject is the Sarasvata-kalpa, the day of Brahma related to Sarasvati—is appropriate because Sarasvati is the goddess of speech, who glorifies the Supreme Lord. Gayatri is also a manifestation of Sarasvati as a special verbal expression establishing the Lord’s glories. Thus the Agni Purana says about Gayatri: “It is called Gayatri because it sings about (gayati) or illuminates the Vedic mantras, the scriptures, the Supreme Lord, and one’s intelligence. It is called Savitri because it reveals Lord Savita, the creator. And it is called Sarasvati because it is the essence of speech” [Agni Pur. 216.1–2].

Now we will resume our sequential explanation of the terms in the passage quoted above from the Garuda Purana [at the beginning of TEXT 21]: Thus "Srimad-Bhagavatam is a COMMENTARY on Gayatri." This is shown in the Visnu-dharmottara Purana, which elaborately demonstrates, in its explanation of the Gayatri mantra [Prathama-khanda 165], that the object of meditation in the Gayatri is the Supreme Lord. We shall provide similar proofs of the Srimad-Bhagavatam's being a COMMENTARY on Gayatri when we comment on the Bhagavatam’s first verseSria (beginning janmady asya). That the Srimad-Bhagavatam explains and expands the Vedas (vedartha-paribrmhitah) is confirmed by the statement in the Mahabharata (Adi-parva 1.267): "One should supplement the Vedas with the Itihasas and Puranas."

The phrase purananam sama-rupa means that just as the Sama Veda is the supreme Veda, so Srimad-Bhagavatam is the supreme Purana. The idea here is as follows: The Sama Veda reconciles the statements of the three divisions of the Vedas—karma-kanda, jïana-kanda, and upasana-kanda—by showing that their message is one. Similarly, Srimad-Bhagavatam shows that although some of the Puranas appear to be tainted with the modes of passion and ignorance, the essence of all the Puranas is worship of the Supreme Lord. Thus it is said: "Throughout the Vedas, Ramayana, Puranas, and Mahabharata, Lord Hari is glorified everywhere, in the beginning, middle, and end" [Mahabharata, Svarga-parva 6.93]. This we will demonstrate later, in the Paramatma-sandarbha (68–73).

That Srimad-Bhagavatam is saksad bhagavatoditah ("spoken directly by the Supreme Lord") is confirmed in the verse near the end of the Bhagavatam beginning kasmai yena vibhasitah, wherein it is said, "We meditate upon the Supreme Lord, who spoke this Srimad-Bhagavatam to Brahma" [Bhag. 12.13.19]. Here we will not explain the phrase sata-viccheda-samyutah ("Srimad-Bhagavatam contains hundreds of divisions") because we are concerned that this book may become too long. In this way it has been shown that Srimad-Bhagavatam is the emperor of all scriptures. And thus it is most appropriate that Sridhara Svami has interpreted the phrase hema-simha-samanvitam [from Srimad-Bhagavatam 12.13.13] to mean "mounted on a golden throne," although ordinarily it would mean "along with a golden lion." In this way we ascertain from the evidence of the Skanda Purana that Srimad-Bhagavatam is the best scripture and the only one we need to study.

Therefore the Skanda Purana says: “In Kali-yuga what is the value of collecting hundreds of thousands of other scriptures if one does not keep Srimad-Bhagavatam at home? How can a person be considered a Vaisnava in Kali-yuga if Srimad-Bhagavatam finds no place in his house? Even if he is a learned brahmana, such a person should be considered lower than a dog-eater. O learned brahmana Narada, wherever Srimad-Bhagavatam is present in Kali-yuga, there the Supreme Lord goes along with the demigods. A person who faithfully recites one verse of Srimad-Bhagavatam every day, O sage, attains the fruit of reading the eighteen Puranas” [Skanda Pur., Visnu-khanda 5.16.40, 42, 44, 331].

The phrase sata-viccheda-samyutah (“having hundreds of divisions”) implies that the Bhagavatam has three hundred and thirty-five chapters. The meaning of the rest of the passage [quoted at the beginning of TEXT 21] is obvious. Thus we have established that at the present time those who want to know the highest goal of life should deliberate on Srimad-Bhagavatam alone.

COMMENTARY Srimad-Bhagavatam Is the Essence of All Vedic Literature In the previous Text, Srila Jiva Gosvami quoted three verses from the Garuda Purana. He explained the first of these in that Text, and now he explains the other two. First he quotes a Bhagavatam verse (3.5.12), and then another (1.4.25), which also appears in Hemadri’s Catur-varga-cintamani, an authoritative 13th-century work on Dharma-sastra dealing with such subjects as vratas (vows), dana (charity), sraddha (memorial rituals), and kala (considerations of time). Jiva Gosvami’s intention in quoting these verses is to show that the Mahabharata is equal to the Vedas. In this part of the Catur-varga-cintamani, Hemadri raises a question about the salvation of those who are not twice-born: Since they do not have access to the Vedas, which give knowledge about Brahman, and since knowledge of Brahman is required for salvation, how can they be saved? To resolve this question he quotes Srimad-Bhagavatam’s description (in verse 1.4.25) of Srila Veda-vyasa’s writing Mahabharata to solve this very problem. The first of the two Bhagavatam verses cited (3.5.12) also states that Srila Vyasa compiled the Mahabharata to attract common people toward the glories of the Personality of Godhead by enticing them to listen to seemingly mundane stories. To fulfill this plan He included the Bhagavad-gita in the Mahabharata. Since the Mahabharata is considered equal to the Vedas in purpose, as is evident from the second verse (Bhag. 1.4.25), and as corroborated by Hemadri, we can deduce that the Vedas also aim at glorifying the Supreme Lord. This being so, the Gayatri mantra, which represents the essence of the Vedas, should also refer to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Krsna. It is with this understanding that the Skanda Purana says that Srimad-Bhagavatam, which glorifies the Lord at every step, is based on Gayatri. Indeed, as we have seen, this is one of the distinctive characteristics of Srimad-Bhagavatam. In the Paramatma-sandarbha, Srila Jiva Gosvami will analyze the first verse of Srimad-Bhagavatam in terms of its being an explanation of the Gayatri mantra. Gayatri is explained in the concluding verses of the Bhagavatam as well. This combination of indications from beginning and ending verses makes it indisputably clear that Srimad-Bhagavatam's purpose is to explain the Personality of Godhead. The prevalent understanding among traditional Vedic scholars is that Gayatri is meant for worshiping either the sun-god or impersonal Brahman. Srila Jiva Gosvami here establishes, however, that the real meaning of Gayatri is the worship of Lord Visnu, who is nondifferent from Lord Krsna. To support his opinion he cites the Agni Purana, which gives Srila Vyasa's opinion on the meaning of Gayatri. In the Visnu-dharmottara Purana (Prathama-khanda, 165th chapter), King Vajra asks Markandeya Rsi why Gayatri is chanted in Vaisnava sacrifices if its presiding deity is the sun-god. Markandeya replies that Gayatri refers to Lord Visnu, and then he proceeds to show how each word of Gayatri is related to Lord Visnu. His explanation concludes with this verse: kama-kamo labhet kamam gati-kamas tu sad-gatim akamas tu tad avapnoti yad visnoh paramam padam "A person desiring material gain or liberation in the next life can achieve either by chanting Gayatri, but the worshiper who is devoid of desires attains the supreme abode of Lord Visnu." It would not be possible to attain the Lord's abode by meditating on Gayatri if it did not in fact express worship of Lord Visnu; this accords with the Lord's own statement in the Bhagavad-gita (9.25) that "Only My worshiper attains Me." Thus Gayatri and the first verse of the Bhagavatam are in complete agreement because they are both meditations on the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The verse cited from the Agni Purana in TEXT 22.5, advising us to meditate on Brahman as nondifferent from ourselves, is also in agreement with the Bhagavatam and Gayatri. The verse is meant to remind us of our spiritual nature, to teach us a meditation that removes our bodily identification and thus helps us worship the Supreme Lord. In the later Texts of the Tattva-sandarbha Srila Jiva Gosvami will discuss in more detail the qualitative oneness of the jiva-Brahman with the Supreme Brahman. In Texts 22.6–8, Srila Jiva Gosvami discusses the relationship between Gayatri and the sun. Srimad-Bhagavatam (12.6.67–72) records the sage Yajïavalkya's prayers in praise of the sun or sun-god, among which texts 67–69 explain the three legs of the Gayatri mantra. From these prayers it may seem that Gayatri is also meant for glorifying the sun-god, but Srila Jiva Gosvami explains that Yajïavalkya is not worshiping the sun-god independently; rather, he is worshiping the Supersoul dwelling within the sun-god. Generally people hail a taxi driver by calling out "Taxi!", not "Taxi driver!", for they regard the driver and his taxi as one unit. Similarly, Yajïavalkya worships the sun-god while considering "the vehicle" (the sun-god) and "the driver" (the Supersoul) as one. This explanation by Jiva Gosvami finds confirmation in Sri Saunaka's question to Suta Gosvami that led to the recitation of Yajïavalkya's prayers. Saunaka explicitly requests "to hear about Lord Hari, the Supersoul of the sun" (Bhag. 12.11.28). Brahmanas customarily chant Gayatri at dawn and at dusk while facing the sun. In this way they meditate on the Supreme Lord through His energies. The logical principle at work here is called candra-sakha-nyaya, or "the example of the branch and the moon." The idea is that to show someone the moon you may first ask him to look at a tree branch, from which you may then draw his attention to the moon beyond the branch. Similarly, the process of meditating on the Lord may include allowing one's attention to be drawn to the Lord through His energies, such as the sun. It is not always practical or advisable for a twice-born brahmana to carry an actual Deity of the Lord, but still he must perform his daily duty of meditating on the Lord at dawn and dusk. So the Vedas enjoin that he should meditate on the Lord through the medium of the ever-present sun, always remembering that beyond the effulgent sun is Lord Visnu. This is called pratikopasana. Srila Jiva Gosvami concludes his discussion of Srimad-Bhagavatam's relationship with Gayatri in TEXT 22.10, where he quotes a statement from the Agni Purana that Gayatri is so called because it sings (gayati) or illuminates the glories of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and protects (trayate) the chanter by fixing his mind on the Lord. Gayatri is related with the sun because one of the words used in Gayatri is Savita, a name for the sun-god. Moreover, another name for Gayatri is Savitri, the daughter of the sun-god. Gayatri is also Sarasvati, the presiding deity of speech, because it is the sound representation of the Supreme Lord. The Skanda Purana therefore states (as quoted in TEXT 20.1) that the Bhagavatam is based on Gayatri (Sarasvati), that it is the sound representation of Krsna, and that it recounts events which occurred during the Sarasvata-kalpa. All this implies that the Bhagavatam's narrations glorify only Krsna. In TEXT 22.11 Srila Jiva Gosvami resumes his analysis of each phrase of the verses from the Garuda Purana quoted in TEXT 21. In these verses Srimad-Bhagavatam is described as "the Sama Veda among the Puranas." Lord Krsna makes a similar statement in the Bhagavad-gita (10.22), where He says, "Of all the Vedas I am the Sama Veda." Here Krsna indicates that since the Sama Veda is the best of all the Vedas, containing beautiful prayers glorifying the Supreme Lord, it therefore represents Him. Such glorification of the Lord is after all the ultimate purpose of the Vedas, as Srimad-Bhagavatam (1.2.28) states: vasudeva-para vedah. The karma-kanda and jïana-kanda portions of the Vedas glorify Krsna indirectly, while the Sama Veda glorifies Him directly, and therefore it is the most important of the Vedas. Like the Vedas, the Puranas also glorify various deities, although their underlying purpose is Krsna's glorification, and Srimad-Bhagavatam is the Sama Veda among the Puranas because it focuses exclusively on Krsna. It reconciles the other Puranas just as the Sama Veda reconciles the Vedas' various kandas. Thus, the Skanda Purana declares, by studying Srimad-Bhagavatam one gets the benefit of studying all the Puranas. The very name of Srimad-Bhagavatam reveals its superior position. Srimat means "beautiful," and bhagavata means "related to the Supreme Lord." Srimad-Bhagavatam is thus the most beautiful literary creation because it describes the beautiful pastimes of the Supreme Person. Srimat also means "opulent." Srimad-Bhagavatam is most opulent because it is identical with Bhagavan, the Personality of Godhead replete with all opulences. Sata-viccheda-samyutah literally means that the Bhagavatam "has hundreds of sections." Although Srila Jiva Gosvami does not comment in detail upon this phrase here, we may point out that most editions of the Bhagavatam have 335 chapters, divided into twelve cantos, but some Vaisnava commentators acknowledge only 332 chapters. They claim that chapters Twelve, Thirteen, and Fourteen of the Tenth Canto are interpolations. However, such great authorities as Sridhara Svami and Vopadeva have accepted these three chapters as authentic and commented on them, and Srila Jiva Gosvami has done so as well. The three chapters in question describe the killing of Aghasura and Lord Brahma's bewilderment by Krsna. In Chapter Twelve of the Twelfth Canto, Suta Gosvami gives a list of the Lord's pastimes, and in the twenty-eighth TEXT of that list he mentions the killing of Aghasura and Lord Brahma's bewilderment. This inclusion of the pastimes from the three disputed chapters clearly indicates that these chapters have a place in the Bhagavatam. Thus in the opinion of Srila Jiva Gosvami the Bhagavatam contains 335 chapters, since otherwise it would fall short of the required eighteen thousand verses. Commenting on the phrase hema-simha-samanvitam (Bhag. 12.13.13), which literally means "together with a golden lion," Srila Sridhara Svami says that simha (lion) indicates a simha-asana, or Deity's throne. In other words, Srimad-Bhagavatam recommends that one mount the Bhagavatam on a golden throne and then donate it. A golden throne is not recommended for any other Purana. Srila Jiva Gosvami concludes, therefore, that just as the lion is the emperor of all animals, Srimad-Bhagavatam is the sovereign ruler of all scriptures. Consequently it is also the sovereign ruler among all pramanas, and, as the Skanda Purana recommends, a person wishing to understand the Absolute Reality need not study any other scripture. Next Srila Jiva Gosvami describes how all the great acaryas and scholars of the past held Srimad-Bhagavatam in the highest esteem.

Thus while there are many authoritative scriptures, only Srimad-Bhagavatam has been glorified with the statement "For the blind souls of Kali-yuga, this Purana has now risen like the sun" [Bhag. 1.3.43].

This comparison of the Bhagavatam to the sun indicates that without its help other scriptures cannot illuminate the Absolute Truth. The Hayasirsa Païcaratra, in its chapter classifying various scriptures, describes the Tantra-bhagavata as essentially a COMMENTARY on Srimad-Bhagavatam. Among the Bhagavatam's direct commentaries are the Hanumad-bhasya, Vasana-bhasya, Sambandhokti, Vidvat-kamadhenu, Tattva-dipika, Bhavartha-dipika, Paramahamsa-priya, and Suka-hrdaya; there are also many works written about Srimad-Bhagavatam, such as Mukta-phala, Hari-lila, and Bhakti-ratnavali. All these works have been produced by the most eminent thinkers of their respective philosophical schools.

Srimad-Bhagavatam is also glorified in the Dana-khanda section of Hemadri's Catur-varga-cintamani. His chapter entitled "Giving Puranas in Charity" praises Srimad-Bhagavatam by noting that it possesses the defining characteristics specified in the Matsya Purana [53.20–22]. In the Parisesa-khanda of the same book, in the Kala-nirnaya section, where Hemadri defines the appropriate religion for Kali-yuga, he quotes the Bhagavatam verse beginning kalim sabhajayanty aryah (11.5.36). In this way he recognizes as appropriate for this age only the religious principles established in Srimad-Bhagavatam. miAnd in a passage that quotes the previously cited series of statements from the Skanda Purana beginning sataso 'tha sahasrais ca, the Samvatsara-pradipa includes several verses of Srimad-Bhagavatam that are meant to be TEXT copied out as an exercise by one who wishes to purify himself from all the faults caused by living in this age.

It is widely acknowledged that Sri Sankaracarya is an incarnation of Lord Siva. Sankaracarya understood the importance of Srimad-Bhagavatam, which, with its statements about the bliss of pure devotional service surpassing even the joy of impersonal liberation, proves superior to his doctrine of impersonalism. He dared not interpret the Bhagavatam, for he recognized it as an exposition of Vedanta philosophy that is without human author. As we shall explain later, on the Supreme Lord's order Sankaracarya taught his doctrine of monism to conceal the Lord's identity, but still, to make his own words successful by saying something about Srimad-Bhagavatam, he touched on it indirectly, describing in his Govindastaka and other hymns certain pastimes of Lord Krsna's that are related only in the Bhagavatam. These include Mother Yasoda's amazement at seeing Krsna's universal form, and His stealing the clothes of the young damsels of Vraja.

COMMENTARY Srimad-Bhagavatam Is Luminous Like the Sun Although there are numerous works of Vedic literature, when Saunaka Rsi questioned Sri Suta Gosvami about where religion would take shelter now that Lord Krsna had returned to His own abode, Suta compared Srimad-Bhagavatam to the sun because it shines the light of the Absolute Truth so brightly that it can dissipate the dense darkness of the Kali Age. When the sun rises, rogues and thieves hide and ordinary people become fearless and active. Similarly, when Srimad-Bhagavatam is read, lust and greed leave one's heart and one becomes qualified to engage in the service of the Supreme Lord. Hence great saints and thinkers have revered Srimad-Bhagavatam by writing commentaries and essays on it. This practice continues in modern times. Among such contemporary saintly persons, the most noteworthy is His Divine Grace Om Visnupada Paramahamsa Parivrajakacarya A. C. Bhaktivedanta Swami Prabhupada, who was not only a scholar of the Bhagavatam but a perfect embodiment of its teachings. He tirelessly imparted its philosophy up to the last moments before he passed away. By presenting Srimad-Bhagavatam in English with an elaborate COMMENTARY , he made the message of the Bhagavatam both unmistakably clear and widely accessible for the first time. Through his efforts, many souls indulging in every sort of roguish vice have had a chance to read the glorious Bhagavatam and have thus undergone a change of heart. They have left their degraded life and taken to the devotional service of Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This practical evidence leaves no room for doubting the potency of Srimad-Bhagavata Purana. Srila Jiva Gosvami again refers to the Catur-varga-cintamani (Dana-khanda 7) of Hemadri, who recommends that one donate Srimad-Bhagavatam after mounting it on a golden throne, and who glorifies it for having the defining characteristics described in the Matsya Purana (see TEXT 19). While determining the religion for this age in the fourteenth chapter of his Catur-varga-cintamani, Parisesa-khanda, Hemadri quotes a Bhagavatam verse (11.5.36): kalim sabhajayanty arya guna-jïah sara-bhaginah yatra sankirtanenaiva sarvah svartho 'bhilabhyate "Those who are actually advanced in knowledge are able to appreciate the essential value of this Age of Kali. Such enlightened persons worship Kali-yuga because in this fallen age all perfection of life can easily be achieved by the performance of sankirtana." Commenting on the word sankirtana, Hemadri declares that hari-sankirtana is the only way to reach perfection. Then he quotes the next verse (11.5.37): na hy atah paramo labho dehinam bhramyatam iha yato vindeta paramam santim nasyati samsrtih "Indeed, there is no higher possible gain for embodied souls forced to wander throughout the material world than the Supreme Lord's sankirtana movement, by which one can attain the supreme peace and free oneself from the cycle of repeated birth and death." In this way Hemadri recognizes the authority of Srimad-Bhagavatam in the matter of establishing the principles of religion for Kali-yuga. Sankaracarya respected Srimad-Bhagavatam both by not commenting on it and by composing prayers based on its narrations. One such prayer is his Govindastaka:

The Personality of Godhead Govinda ordered Lord Siva to take birth as Sankara to propagate impersonalism. Then from the Mayavada viewpoint Sankaracarya wrote commentaries on the Vedanta-sutra, eleven of the principal Upanisads, the Bhagavad-gita, and Sri Visnu-sahasra-nama. He did not interpret Srimad-Bhagavatam, however, because he considered it very dear to the Lord and His devotees, and also nondifferent from the Lord. There can be no doubt about Lord Siva's appreciation of the Bhagavatam, since in the Twelfth Canto Siva is described as the greatest Vaisnava. As such, he must be fully aware that it is the supreme pramana, and so out of respect he did not interpret it. From the Padma Purana (Uttara-khanda 71.107) we learn how Lord Visnu ordered Siva to propagate monism: svagamaih kalpitais tvam ca janan mad-vimukhan kuru mam ca gopaya yena syat srstir esottarottara "[Lord Visnu said:] O Siva, make people averse to Me by writing speculative scriptures and thus hiding My glories. In this way the world's population will increase." The import of this order is as follows: When Lord Buddha's teachings were predominant in India, people grew contemptuous of the Vedas and Vedic rituals. They became sunyavadis, or voidists, and Vedic religious practices decreased almost to nil. In this condition the people were not prepared to hear seriously about the personality of the Supreme Lord, His transcendental, eternal, blissful form, or His variegated abode. They would have simply blasphemed these teachings, and then they would have been left with no way to purify their hearts. So the first task in bridging the wide gap between voidism and personalism was to reawaken people's faith in the Vedas. It was for this purpose that Sankaracarya introduced his Advaita version of monism, a philosophy intermediate between voidism and personalism. Going from the Buddhist nasti to the Mayavada neti, neti—from "The Absolute is nothing" to "The Absolute is something but contains nothing"—is a simple, incremental move, for the difference between these two ideas is hardly noticeable. Still, because Sankara based his philosophy on the Upanisads, Vedanta-sutra, and other Vedic works, that one step was critical in bringing the populace back to accepting the authority of the Vedas. Later in the Uttara-khanda of Padma Purana (236.7) Lord Siva himself describes Advaita monism as veiled Buddhism: maya-vadam asac chastram pracchanam bauddham ucyate. "Mayavada philosophy is an improper explanation of the scriptures; indeed, it is veiled Buddhism." Sankaracarya's propagation of Mayavada philosophy was planned by his Lord, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who recognized that until conditioned souls regained access to the Vedas' spiritual knowledge they could only speculate about transcendent reality and would have no hope of being delivered from the material world. Once Advaita Vedanta had replaced Buddhism and faith in the Vedas had been re-established, people could be brought further along the path of knowledge to an appreciation for the glories of the Personality of Godhead. This would be accomplished by counteracting the appeal of impersonalism with true Vaisnava philosophy. Thus stalwart Vaisnava acaryas like Ramanujacarya, Madhvacarya, and Sridhara Svami came one after another to drive out impersonalism. In its place they re-established the principles of pure devotional service as the true spirit and intent of the Vedas and its corollary scriptures. For his part, Sridhara Svami helped the impersonalists get a taste for Srimad-Bhagavatam by writing a COMMENTARY that also appealed to them. Still later, the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself came in the garb of a devotee, as Sri Krsna Caitanya Mahaprabhu, and went even further. He taught that even more advanced than vaidhi-bhakti, the path of regulated devotional service, is raga-bhakti, the path of spontaneous loving devotion to Krsna, which one can traverse by following in the footsteps of Vrndavana's residents. He also taught that this raga-bhakti, which is elaborately explained in the Tenth Canto of Srimad-Bhagavatam, is the ultimate expression of prema, love of God. Since Caitanya Mahaprabhu is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who can contest His siddhanta? Rather, the gradual progression from voidism to monism to personalism to raga-bhakti was all the Lord's plan for mercifully saving the conditioned souls, an arrangement by which they could end the otherwise endless cycle of birth and death. Without a doubt, therefore, the Lord was not acting cruelly or capriciously when He instructed Lord Siva to appear as Sankara and spread the false doctrine of the individual soul's absolute oneness with the Supreme. To the contrary, He did so out of His limitless mercy. In later Texts, Srila Jiva Gosvami will point out many inconsistencies between Sankara's teachings and the actual conclusion of the Vedas. In the next TEXT he shows us the glories of Srimad-Bhagavatam that the Bhagavatam itself reveals .

Devotees of Lord Visnu recount that although Sri Madhvacarya-carana belonged to the direct disciplic line of Sankaracarya, upon reading the Bhagavatam Madhvacarya changed his allegiance to the Vaisnava school. Then, concerned that other Vaisnavas might be influenced by the commentaries of other disciplic descendants of Sankara, such as the COMMENTARY by Punyaranya, Sri Madhvacarya wrote Bhagavata-tatparyaya, a gloss on Srimad-Bhagavatam that showed the proper method of interpretation.

In the First Canto [1.3.41]: “After extracting the cream of all the Vedas and Itihasas, Sri Vyasadeva imparted this Srimad-Bhagavatam to his son Sukadeva, the best of the self-realized souls.” In the Twelfth Canto [12.13.15]: “Srimad-Bhagavatam is declared to be the essence of all Vedanta philosophy. One who has felt satisfaction from its nectarean mellow will never be attracted to any other literature.”

And in the First Canto [1.1.3]: “O expert and thoughtful men on the earth, relish Srimad-Bhagavatam, the mature fruit of the desire tree of Vedic literature, up to liberation and beyond. It emanated from the lips of Sri Sukadeva Gosvami. Therefore this fruit has become even more tasteful, although its nectarean juice was already relishable for all, including liberated souls.” Thus in the same canto [1.2.3]: “Let me offer my respectful obeisances unto him [Sukadeva], the spiritual master of all sages, the son of Vyasadeva, who, out of his great compassion for those gross materialists who struggle to cross over the darkest regions of material existence, spoke this most confidential supplement to the cream of all Vedic knowledge, the transcendental torchlight of Srimad-Bhagavatam, after having personally assimilated it by experience.” These verses imply that the teachings of Srimad-Bhagavatam rule over all other philosophies. They also clearly indicate that Sri Sukadeva, by taking the speaker’s seat amidst the assembled sages as the Bhagavatam’s preceptor, became the guru of everyone present.

COMMENTARY Srimad-Bhagavatam Is the Topmost Vedic Scripture Here Srila Jiva Gosvami explains Madhvacarya’s reason for commenting on Srimad-Bhagavatam. Sankaracarya wrote poems glorifying Lord Krsna’s pastimes as told in the Bhagavatam, but some of his followers, not understanding his true intention, took this as a license to try to include the Bhagavatam as part of the Mayavada canon. Of those who tried to do this, a few wrote commentaries on the Bhagavatam and somehow managed to screw out an impersonal interpretation. One such COMMENTARY was Punyaranya’s, which is now lost. Srila Madhvacarya, wanting to protect Vaisnavas from being misled, wrote a gloss called Bhagavata-tatparya. Since Jiva Gosvami has already shown that Srimad-Bhagavatam is the topmost pramana, he can now cite it directly to demonstrate its own stature. Such citations will only increase a sincere reader’s faith in the Bhagavatam, and so from this point on Srila Jiva Gosvami relies on the Bhagavatam itself as the principal source for his analysis. Here he also reveals the eminence Srimad-Bhagavatam enjoys by virtue of the status of its brilliant speaker, Sukadeva Gosvami. Vyasadeva taught the Bhagavatam to Sukadeva, his most brilliant student, and Sukadeva chose to study Bhagavatam because it is the most brilliant of books. Although Srila Vyasadeva had many disciples, He gave the Bhagavatam only to Sukadeva. Vyasa did this not because He was partial toward his son but because Sukadeva was atma-vatam varam, “the best of the self-realized.” In other words, Sukadeva had no ulterior, material motives, and therefore he could understand the true purport of the Bhagavatam, the essence of the Vedas, Vedanta, and Itihasas. The most important part of a tree is its sweet, juicy fruit, and so Srimad-Bhagavatam has been compared to the succulent fruit of the tree of Vedic literature. And this Bhagavatam fruit is even more exceptional because it has no skin or pit. In other words, there is nothing to discard in the Bhagavatam. In this TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami quotes two verses from the Bhagavatam, 1.1.3 and 1.2.3, to show its importance for both liberated and conditioned souls. Because Sukadeva was completely free of selfish motives, he fully realized the Bhagavatam’s significance and so was elected to speak, even in an assembly of learned sages that included his guru and his guru’s guru. The choice of Sukadeva as speaker implies that his qualifications for reciting Srimad-Bhagavatam made him superior to all the other assembled sages. This is one more indication that Srimad-Bhagavatam is the foremost of scriptures and that it alone should be analyzed to know sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana. Next Srila Jiva Gosvami shows the importance of the speaker, Sri Sukadeva Gosvami.

On the plea of making a pilgrim's journey, such sages verily sanctify a place of pilgrimage just by their presence. From different parts of the universe there arrived great sages like Atri, Cyavana, Saradvan, Aristanemi, Bhrgu, Vasistha, Parasara, Visvamitra, Angira, Parasurama, Utathya, Indrapramada, Idhmabahu, Medhatithi, Devala, Arstisena, Bharadvaja, Gautama, Pippalada, Maitreya, Aurva, Kavasa, Kumbhayoni, Dvaipayana, and the great personality Narada. There were also many other saintly demigods, kings, and special royal orders called arunadayas [a special rank of rajarsis] from different dynasties of sages. When they all assembled to meet the emperor [Pariksit], he received them properly and bowed his head to the ground. After all the rsis and others had seated themselves comfortably, the king, humbly standing before them with folded hands, told them of his decision to fast until death." Then the king said: "O trustworthy brahmanas, I now ask you about my immediate duty. Please, after proper deliberation, tell me of the unalloyed duty of everyone in all circumstances, and specifically of those who are just about to die" [Bhag. 1.19.24]. Then, after the king's query: "At that moment there appeared the powerful son of Vyasadeva, who traveled over the earth indifferent and satisfied within himself. He did not manifest any symptoms of belonging to any social order or status of life. He was surrounded by women and children, and he dressed as if others had neglected him" [Bhag. 1.19.25].

His presence was gorgeous, and he was respected by all" [Bhag. 1.19.30].

COMMENTARY Sri Sukadeva Is the Best Scholar of Srimad-Bhagavatam After Srngi cursed Maharaja Pariksit, the king renounced his kingdom and took a vow to fast until death on the bank of the Ganges. At that time sages of all classes and orders came from various parts of the universe and assembled there. Among them were even incarnations of the Lord like Parasurama and Vyasadeva. When Pariksit Maharaja inquired from them about the duties of a human being, especially one who is about to die, no one gave him a definitive answer. At that time the most noble Sukadeva Gosvami arrived, and he was unanimously chosen as the right person to answer Maharaja Pariksit's query. In the previous TEXT Jiva Gosvami said that all the sages accepted Sukadeva as guru. In this section Jiva Gosvami cites the references to support his claim. Since the sages accepted Sukadeva as guru and it was Srimad-Bhagavatam that he spoke in response to Pariksit Maharaja's questions, we should understand that the Bhagavatam's philosophy was accepted by all the assembled sages, who included propagators and followers of various other philosophies. Just as Srila Sukadeva Gosvami shone like an effulgent moon among the starlike sages, Srimad-Bhagavatam shines in the same way among all other scriptures. Next Srila Jiva Gosvami shows that Srimad-Bhagavatam is the representative of Lord Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Sri Vyasadeva and Narada Muni were present in that assembly. Although these two sages were Sri Suka's guru and grand-guru, respectively, when they heard Srimad-Bhagavatam issuing from his lips, they felt as if they had never heard it before. For this reason it is said here that he taught this most significant wisdom even to them. As mentioned earlier, suka-mukhad amrta-drava-samyutam: "The Bhagavatam is enriched with nectarean juice from the mouth of Suka" [Bhag. 1.1.3]. Thus in this sense also Srimad-Bhagavatam is more glorious than any other scripture. Statements about the superiority of other Puranas, such as the Matsya Purana, are only relatively true. What more need be said! Indeed, Srimad-Bhagavatam is the very representation of Lord Krsna.

As the First Canto states: "This Srimad-Bhagavatam is as brilliant as the sun, and it has arisen just after the departure of Lord Krsna to His own abode, accompanied by religion, knowledge, etc. Persons who have lost their vision due to the dense darkness of ignorance in the Age of Kali shall get light from this Purana" [Bhag. 1.3.43]. In this way we can see that only Srimad-Bhagavatam is full with all virtues, as stated in the second verse of the First Canto: "Here the supreme religion is explained and all cheating propensities are rejected." The supremacy of the Bhagavatam is also confirmed by the words of both Vopadeva (in his Mukta-phala) and Hemadri: "The Vedas, Puranas, and poetic works instruct one like a master, friend, or beloved, respectively, but Srimad-Bhagavatam instructs like all three."

Consequently, while some may think that other Puranas need the support of the Vedas' authority, Srimad-Bhagavatam itself explicitly refutes the possibility that it may be dependent in this way; we thus receive the Bhagavatam on its own authority alone. For this reason it is in fact the highest manifestation of sruti [the original Vedas]. As it is said: "How did it so happen that King Pariksit met this great sage, making it possible for this Vedic TEXT for the pure Vaisnavas (satvati sruti) to be sung to him?" [Bhag. 1.4.7]. That Srimad-Bhagavatam was compiled after the other Puranas, as mentioned earlier, is known from the dialogue between Sri Vyasa and Narada Muni in the First Canto.

COMMENTARY Srimad-Bhagavatam Is Self-Sufficient Vedic tradition recognizes three ways of teaching—like a ruler, like a friend, and like a lover. The Vedas speak in an imperative voice, like an overlord: satyam vada dharmam cara. "Speak the truth and be religious" (Taittiriya Up. 1.11). The Vedas do not need to offer logical reasons for following their instructions. One is expected to obey without question. The Puranas instruct like a friend, narrating stories with moral conclusions and providing reasoned explanations when required. Kavya, or poetic literature, gives counsel like a beloved lady, speaking sweetly but indirectly. Instructions are expressed in an aesthetically pleasing way to attract the reader or hearer. Srimad-Bhagavatam uses all three of these methods to convey its teachings. Just as a phrase or song becomes more significant when an eminent personality quotes or sings it, so the Bhagavatam has increased in significance because the eminent Sukadeva Gosvami recited it. He narrated the Bhagavatam in such a marvelous way that both his guru, Srila Vyasadeva, and his param guru, Sri Narada Muni, were amazed. They felt as if they had never heard it before. The customary etiquette is that a disciple should neither sit higher than his teachers nor speak as an authority in their presence. Sukadeva Gosvami's speaking Srimad-Bhagavatam from an elevated seat in the presence of his gurus is one of the rare exceptions. Because his gurus consented to it, however, Sri Suka is faultless, as Srila Visvanatha Cakravarti Thakura points out in his COMMENTARY on Bhagavatam 1.17.29, which describes Suka's accepting the speaker's seat. From the narrations of the Mahabharata we learn that Narada and Vyasa were often called upon to address various audiences on the subjects of karma, yoga, and jïana. They rarely had an opportunity to hear such extraordinarily pure Bhagavata discourse. So they were moved to great ecstasy when the nectarlike juice of topics concerning the Supreme Personality of Godhead issued from the lips of Sri Suka, their qualified disciple. Srimad-Bhagavatam's special greatness is thus due to its unparalleled author, its eminent speaker, and its elevated audience. No other scripture in recorded history has ever had such an audience, except perhaps when Grandfather Bhisma instructed King Yudhisthira from his bed of arrows after the Kuruksetra War. Bhisma's main purpose, however, was to convince Yudhisthira to begin managing his kingdom. By contrast, Srimad-Bhagavatam was spoken in just the opposite context: King Pariksit, having renounced his kingdom, simply wanted to hear krsna-katha and in this way discharge the only duty of a dying man. Sri Sukadeva thus had no need to dilute his narration with talk of lower religious principles. Therefore Srimad-Bhagavatam is the most perfect and complete transcendental scripture. It does not even depend on the support of the Vedas. Indeed, the sunlike Srimad-Bhagavatam is the very representation of Lord Krsna. The Lord possesses all good qualities, as Srila Rupa Gosvami explains in his Bhakti-rasamrta-sindhu (2.1.17) while analyzing various devotional mellows: nayakanam siro-ratnam krsnas tu bhagavan svayam yatra nityataya sarve virajante maha-gunah "Lord Sri Krsna, the original Personality of Godhead, is the crest jewel of all heroes. All wonderful qualities are eternally present in Him." Since Srimad-Bhagavatam is nondifferent from Krsna, it is also a reservoir of all good qualities. When Lord Krsna appeared He destroyed many demons and protected His saintly devotees. In the same way, the Bhagavata Purana uproots the demoniac influence in society and protects saintly persons with its ambrosial narrations. Other scriptures speak about fruitive activities, impersonal Brahman, or yoga, and they may or may not say something about the transcendental path of love of Godhead. But the Bhagavatam kicks out all types of inferior, cheating religions like refuse. Only explanations of the Absolute Reality find a place in its pages. Having established Bhagavatam as the supreme pramana, in the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami explains his method of analyzing it.

So it is that we shall focus our attention on studying Srimad-Bhagavatam to determine what is the ultimate good in life. While conducting this study, we shall take into consideration how Srimad-Bhagavatam's statements harmonize with their preceding and following texts. In these Six Sandarbhas, the statements with which we introduce our explanation of the Bhagavatam verses will serve as the sutras, the Bhagavatam verses themselves will serve as the scriptural TEXT to be analyzed, and the explanations of these verses given by the great Vaisnava Sridhara Svami will serve as the COMMENTARY on the sutras. Sometimes he inserted Mayavadi ideas into his writings to make the glories of the Personality of Godhead more attractive to the minds of the impersonalists, who are now quite prevalent, especially in central India. When Sridhara Svami's COMMENTARY accords with strict Vaisnava principles, we shall quote it verbatim.

Sometimes we shall follow the views Sridhara Svami has expressed in writings other than his Bhagavatam COMMENTARY . In other cases we shall follow the original meaning of the TEXT by basing our explanations on the authoritative opinions of the venerable Ramanujacarya Bhagavatpada, expressed in such works as Sri-bhasya. He is the renowned leader of the Vaisnavas of the Sri-sampradaya, which originated directly with Goddess Laksmi. These great devotees are famous throughout India's southern region (Dravida-desa) and elsewhere. Srimad-Bhagavatam itself states that they are well known as devotees of Visnu in the south: "O king, a few Vaisnavas can be seen here and there in this age, but they can be found in abundance in the Dravida country" [Bhag. 11.5.39]. Since the principles of Advaita-vada are already well known, we shall not discuss them at length.

COMMENTARY Methodology of the Sat-sandarbha Here Srila Jiva Gosvami explains his method of analyzing Srimad-Bhagavatam. He plans to follow a format similar to the one Srila Vyasadeva uses in the Vedanta-sutra. In the Sandarbhas, the introductory statements are like the sutras in the Vedanta-sutra, the statements of Srimad-Bhagavatam constitute the subject to be analyzed, and Srila Jiva Gosvami's comments on the Bhagavatam's statements are like the COMMENTARY (bhasya) on the sutras. Jiva Gosvami also indicates that his explanations are not his personal opinion or products of his imagination but are given strictly according to the opinions of the previous Vaisnava acaryas, such as Ramanujacarya and Sridhara Svami. Although Sridhara Svami accepted the renounced order of life in Sankara's sampradaya, which opposes the personalism of Krsna consciousness, his commentaries on Srimad-Bhagavatam, the Bhagavad-gita, and the Visnu Purana make it obvious that he was a great Vaisnava. He clearly states in his commentaries that the Lord's form, qualities, abode, associates, and names are all transcendental and eternal, and that devotion to the Lord continues even after liberation. These key philosophical points are opposed to Advaita monism and reveal Sridhara Svami's true stance. Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu also accepted sannyasa in Sankara's line, but from the beginning His teachings refuted the Mayavada doctrine. Hence Sri Caitanya's great respect for Sridhara Svami and his Bhagavatam COMMENTARY is proof enough that Sridhara Svami was not a Mayavada sannyasi at heart, any more than Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu was. Caitanya Mahaprabhu considered all Mayavadis offenders at the lotus feet of Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, yet he would not tolerate even mild or indirect criticism of Srila Sridhara Svami. When Vallabha Bhatta told Lord Caitanya he had written a Bhagavatam COMMENTARY that surpassed Sridhara Svami's, Lord Caitanya rebuked Vallabha and refused to hear it (see Caitanya-caritamrta, Antya 113–37). From this incident we can understand the exalted status of Sridhara Svami as a surrendered, pure devotee of the Lord. We can also be certain that Jiva Gosvami, as a loyal follower of Lord Caitanya's, held Sridhara Svami's Bhagavatam COMMENTARY , Bhavartha-dipika, in high esteem. Thus Srila Jiva Gosvami refers to Sridhara as parama-vaisnava, a topmost devotee. In this TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami tells why Sridhara Svami inserted some Mayavadi ideas into his Bhavartha-dipika COMMENTARY . Some of Sankara's followers developed a taste for Srimad-Bhagavatam after reading his devotional poems based on the Bhagavatam, but these followers still maintained their overall impersonal outlook. To attract these sannyasis toward the path of devotion, Sridhara Svami wrote a mixed COMMENTARY on the spotless Purana. Just as a fisherman uses bait to catch fish, occasionally Sridhara Svami would present monistic opinions about some Bhagavatam verses in order to attract the Mayavadis who liked to read the Bhagavatam. This was merely part of his preaching strategy; it doesn't make him a Mayavadi. Nevertheless, although Jiva Gosvami understands Sridhara Svami's motives, in the Sandarbhas he chooses not to cite the impersonal explanations found in the Bhavartha-dipika. In fact, throughout the Sandarbhas Srila Jiva Gosvami takes every opportunity to demolish the Mayavada view. Clearly he does not consider the Mayavadis his primary audience, as Sridhara Svami must have when he wrote his COMMENTARY . Jiva Gosvami's intended audience is apparent from his declaration in the sixth TEXT of the Tattva-sandarbha, where he says that no one should read this book who is averse to serving Lord Krsna's lotus feet. Jiva Gosvami's intended audience comprises those who are already on the path of Krsna consciousness or at least interested in taking to it. Naturally, therefore, he says here that he will quote from Sridhara Svami's COMMENTARY only when it accords with strict Vaisnava principles. This statement has caused some modern scholars to criticize Jiva Gosvami for not respecting the liberal sentiments of Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, but this criticism arises from a superficial understanding of Lord Caitanya's real attitude. Sridhara Svami was not a Mayavadi, although for the reason mentioned above he did give a monistic slant to some parts of his Bhagavatam COMMENTARY . Considering why Sridhara Svami did this in his Bhavartha-dipika, why should Srila Jiva Gosvami, in an entirely different work meant for an entirely different audience, cite those explanations of Sridhara's that oppose the true conclusion of the Bhagavatam and even Sridhara Svami's own convictions? Sri Jiva has already established Srimad-Bhagavatam as the supreme authority, and from this point on in his Sandarbhas he will not deal with any opinions that contradict it. He makes his policy explicit: He respects the purports of Sridhara insofar as they follow the spirit and intent of Srimad-Bhagavatam itself. In this way Srila Jiva Gosvami remains true to the Vaisnavism of Srila Sridhara Svami and also to his own Gaudiya-sampradaya. At the end of this Text, when Jiva Gosvami says he is not going to describe the details of the Advaita monistic doctrine because they are already well known, he implies that Mayavada, though popular, only apparently explains the meaning of the sastras and is not really worth discussing, and he also implies that he intends to refute it. Next Srila Jiva Gosvami describes the sources of evidence other than Srimad-Bhagavatam that he plans to cite in the Sat-sandarbha.

Here in the Sat-sandarbha I will quote from the Vedas, Puranas, and other such scriptures, just as I have seen them. I will quote these passages to verify my own interpretations, not the statements of Srimad-Bhagavatam. Some of the verses quoted here I have not seen in their original texts but have gleaned from citations in the Bhagavata-tatparya, Bharata-tatparya, Brahma-sutra-bhasya, and other works by the venerable Madhvacarya, the prolific preacher of the distinct Vaisnava philosophy of Tattva-vada. Although coming originally in the disciplic line of Sriman Sankaracarya, he became an adherent of Vaisnavism and severed his connection with the Advaitins. In his line have appeared such disciples and grand-disciples as Vijayadhvaja Tirtha, Brahma Tirtha and Vyasa Tirtha; very famous in the south, they are most eminent scholars of the Vedic literature and its interpretation.

In his Bharata-tatparya Sri Madhvacarya states: “Having understood other scriptures with the help of the Vedanta-sutra, and having looked at various kinds of scriptures in different parts of the country, I shall give my explanation in accordance with what Sri Vyasadeva, who is none other than the Supreme Lord Narayana, has spoken in His Mahabharata and other works. In this description I will carefully adhere to His viewpoint” [Bharata-tatparyya 2.7.8]. The texts we will cite from the works of Sri Madhvacarya will include portions from such Vedic srutis as the Catur-veda-sikha, Puranic texts from unavailable parts of the Garuda Purana and other works, samhita texts from the Maha-samhita and similar works, and tantra texts from the Tantra-bhagavatam, Brahma-tarka, and so on.

COMMENTARY The Source of References Since Srila Jiva Gosvami has proven Srimad-Bhagavatam to be the supreme pramana, it needs no further validation. Therefore, as he mentions here, from this point onward he will quote scripture only to support his own interpretations, not the Bhagavatam’s statements. He will cite sources he has read in his own library and elsewhere, and he will also borrow references from the writings of Sri Madhvacarya, who lived a few centuries before Jiva. Madhvacarya often quotes from books that by Sri Jiva's time had already been lost. In Madhvacarya's time (the twelfth century A.D.) there were no printing presses. Madhvacarya traveled the length and breadth of India collecting scriptures and philosophical books and copying them by hand at the various temples and libraries he visited. He was renowned for his photographic memory, so when he was not allowed to copy the books he found, he read them and later reproduced them from memory. In this way he amassed an immense library at his headquarters in Udupi, in Karnataka. Some say his library had no equal. Unfortunately, it was destroyed by fire, and many of the books he refers to in his writings were lost forever. In several places in the Sandarbhas Srila Jiva Gosvami has to make do with the references from lost works cited by Madhvacarya in his books. Madhvacarya's Tattva-vada is by definition the philosophy that "everything is real": sarvam vastu satyam iti tattva-vadah. The Advaita monists say that only Brahman is real and that everything else is a manifestation of Maya. Madhvacarya soundly defeated the Mayavada philosophy with his Tattva-vada, both in his writings and in public debates with the leading Mayavadis of his time. By relying on books by Srila Madhvacarya and his eminent followers as a principal source of evidence, Jiva Gosvami shows his indebtedness to them. Jiva Gosvami is, however, a follower of Lord Caitanya, whose teachings differ from Madhvacarya's. In his Sandarbhas Sri Jiva plans to draw from those ideas of Madhvacarya that agree with Lord Krsna Caitanya Mahaprabhu's Acintya-bhedabheda philosophy. When examined impartially, the Acintya-bhedabheda philosophy proves the best and most comprehensive explanation of Vedic knowledge. It is the perfect synthesis of all the Vedic literature because its creator, Sri Caitanya, is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. When the Supreme Lord creates a philosophy, it naturally surpasses all other systems of thought. Here the pramana section of Sri Tattva-sandarbha ends. Having established sabda-pramana as the only independently valid means of knowledge, and having established Srimad-Bhagavatam as the topmost form of sabda-pramana, in the next section Srila Jiva Gosvami will begin his discussion of the prameya, or what we come to know by resorting to the topmost pramana.

disposition of the heart of its speaker while offering him obeisances: “Let me offer my respectful obeisances unto Sukadeva Gosvami, my spiritual master, the son of Vyasadeva. It is he who defeats all inauspicious things within this universe. Although in the beginning he was absorbed in the happiness of Brahman realization, giving up all other types of consciousness, he became attracted by the pleasing, most melodious pastimes of Lord Ajita. He therefore mercifully spoke this supreme Purana, Srimad-Bhagavatam, which is the bright light of the Absolute Truth and which describes the activities of the Lord” [Bhag. 12.12.69].

Sridhara Svami explains in his COMMENTARY : “Suta Gosvami pays obeisances to his spiritual master [Sri Suka], whose mind was filled only with the bliss of the self and who had thus put aside all other thoughts. But even at that elevated stage his mind was drawn to the enchanting pastimes of Lord Ajita, and this attraction caused him to abandon his sober attachment to impersonal bliss. I offer my obeisances unto him, the speaker of Srimad-Bhagavatam, which illumines the supreme goal of life.”

Sri-sutah Sri-saunakam. Similarly worth examining are the three verses Sri Suka speaks in the Second Canto that begin with the verse whose first line is prayena munayo rajan [Bhag. 2.1.7–9]. In the verse under discussion [Bhag. 12.12.69] we should understand that the words akhila-vrjinam (“all inauspicious things”) indicate everything contrary or irrelevant to devotional service. Therefore the subject of this book (sambandhi-tattva) is Sriman Ajita, who transcends the ecstasy of impersonal realization and is distinguished by His enchanting pleasure pastimes. Later, in the con TEXT of our discussion of Srila Vyasa’s trance, it will be made clear that in His fullest manifestation Lord Ajita is primarily named Sri Krsna. Similarly, the final goal (prayojana-tattva) is the happiness of love for Him, which leads to the sort of attachment to Him that Sri Suka experienced. And thus our means (abhidheya) is service to Him, characterized by such devotional processes as hearing His divine pastimes, an activity that generates love for Him, as it did in the case of Sri Suka. The identity of each of these three principles (sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana) follows as a natural logical consequence. The phrase vyasa-sunum ("son of Sri Vyasa") [in Srimad-Bhagavatam 12.12.69] alludes to something described in the Brahma-vaivarta Purana—namely, that Sukadeva, because of Sri Krsna's benediction, remained untouched by Maya from his very birth. The verse under discussion [Bhag. 12.12.69] was spoken by Sri Suta to Sri Saunaka.

COMMENTARY Sri Sukadeva Gosvami's Faith In the preceding Texts, Srila Jiva Gosvami compared and contrasted the Vedas, Vedanta, Itihasas, and Puranas to show that Srimad-Bhagavatam is the topmost pramana for all time. Now, at the commencement of his analysis of the Bhagavatam itself, he again performs mangalacarana to further invoke auspiciousness for his sacred undertaking of writing the Sat-sandarbha. Once again he uses a Bhagavatam verse as his invocation. By quoting from Suta Gosvami's prayers to Sukadeva, Srila Jiva Gosvami himself reveres Sukadeva Gosvami to invoke his blessings, so that Jiva may present the purport of Srimad-Bhagavatam without any deviation. Then he points out the tattvas of sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana in the quoted verse. Unlike commentators who twist the Bhagavatam's statements to support their own ideas, Srila Jiva Gosvami has no interest in forcing any private opinions on us. He wants to explain Srimad-Bhagavatam as it is. To this end he uses a flawless technique, one that leaves us no room for doubting the correctness of his conclusions. First he has us consider the heart of the original writer, Srila Vyasadeva, and also the hearts of the speakers, Sukadeva Gosvami and Suta Gosvami. Then he analyzes the TEXT of the Bhagavatam in light of that examination, incontrovertibly establishing the purpose of this topmost pramana. In the verse quoted from Srimad-Bhagavatam in TEXT 29.1, Suta Gosvami reveals something about the life of Sukadeva Gosvami, describing how he became enchanted by the pastimes of Krsna even while absorbed in the bliss of Brahman. Suta's purpose is to show the firm conviction Sukadeva had in Srimad-Bhagavatam when he narrated it to Pariksit Maharaja. Sukadeva was self-realized even while in the womb. Indeed, he was so absorbed in the bliss of Brahman that he wanted to stay there to avoid being attacked by Maya. He left the womb only when Lord Krsna personally assured him that Maya would not capture him. (Srila Jiva Gosvami informs us that this description is found in the Brahma-vaivarta Purana.) As we learn from Chapter Seven of Srimad-Bhagavatam's First Canto and from the texts that Srila Jiva Gosvami will quote below, as soon as Sukadeva took birth he left his father's hermitage for the forest. Later, when he heard a few of Vyasadeva's disciples reciting some selected Bhagavatam verses, his mind became so enthralled that he abandoned his impersonal meditation on Brahman and began studying the Bhagavatam under his great father. Despite all this, however, some Mayavadis insist that because Srila Sukadeva Gosvami was attached to impersonal Brahman realization even before his birth, he must have remained fixed in this ideal. Therefore, they conclude, Srimad-Bhagavatam in fact promotes Advaita impersonalism. The prayer of Suta Gosvami quoted here refutes this speculation. Another reason Srila Jiva Gosvami quotes Suta's prayer is to reveal the essential purport of Srimad-Bhagavatam: The happiness of Krsna consciousness surpasses all other kinds, including that enjoyed by merging into God's impersonal effulgence.In the Second Canto (Bhag. 2.1.7–9), Sukadeva Gosvami himself confirms the superiority of the bliss of bhakti: prayena munayo rajan nivrtta vidhi-sedhatah nairgunya-stha ramante sma gunanukathane hareh pidam bhagavatam nama puranam brahma-sammitam adhitavan dvaparadau pitur dvaipayanad aham pparinisthito 'pi nairgunya uttama-sloka-lilaya grhita-ceta rajarse akhyanam yad adhitavan "O King Pariksit, mainly the topmost transcendentalists, who are above the regulative principles and restrictions, take pleasure in describing the glories of the Lord. At the end of the Dvapara-yuga I studied this great supplement of Vedic literature named Srimad-Bhagavatam, which is equal to all the Vedas, from my father, Srila Dvaipayana Vyasadeva. O saintly King, I was certainly situated perfectly in transcendence, yet I was still attracted by the delineation of the pastimes of the Lord, who is described by enlightened verses. Therefore I studied this Purana." This incident from Sukadeva's life demonstrates the wonderful potency of Srimad-Bhagavatam—that it was able to capture the heart of a highly advanced Brahman-realized soul. In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami begins analyzing the heart of Srila Vyasadeva.

What Vyasadeva experienced indicates the principles he will later establish in his book, Srimad-Bhagavatam. Sri Suta describes this trance in brief: "Thus he fixed his mind, perfectly engaging it by linking it in devotional service [bhakti-yoga] without any tinge of materialism, and thus he saw the Absolute Personality of Godhead along with His external energy, which was under full control. Due to this external energy, the living entity, although transcendental to the three modes of material nature, thinks of himself as a material product and thus undergoes the reactions of material miseries. The material miseries of the living entity, which are superfluous to him, can be directly mitigated by the linking process of devotional service. But the mass of people do not know this, and therefore the learned Vyasadeva composed this Vedic scripture [Srimad-Bhagavatam], which is in relation to the Supreme Truth. Simply by one's giving aural reception to this Vedic scripture, the feeling for loving devotional service to Lord Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, sprouts up at once to extinguish the fire of lamentation, illusion, and fearfulness. The great sage Vyasadeva, after composing the Srimad-Bhagavatam and revising it, taught it to His son, Sri Sukadeva Gosvami, who was already engaged in self-realization" [Bhag. 1.7.4–8].

Saunaka Rsi then inquires: "Sri Sukadeva Gosvami was already on the path of self-realization, and thus he was pleased with his own self. So why did he take the trouble to undergo the study of such a vast literature?" [Bhag. 1.7.9]. Suta Gosvami replies: "All different varieties of atmaramas [those who take pleasure in atma, or spirit self], especially those established on the path of self-realization, though freed from all kinds of material bondage, desire to render unalloyed devotional service unto the Personality of Godhead. This means that the Lord possesses transcendental qualities and therefore can attract everyone, including liberated souls. Srila Sukadeva Gosvami, the son of Srila Vyasadeva, was not only transcendentally powerful. He was also very dear to the devotees of the Lord. Thus, his mind captivated by the enchanting qualities of Lord Hari, he underwent the study of this great narration [Srimad-Bhagavatam]" [Bhag. 1.7.10–11]. The phrase bhakti-yogena ("through devotional service," [in Bhagavatam 1.7.4]) means "through love of God," since the same meaning is conveyed in the following statement: "My dear King, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Mukunda, sometimes grants liberation to those who are engaged in getting His favor, but He rarely grants bhakti-yoga, pure love for Him" [Bhag. 5.6.18].

The word pranihite ("fixed") means "concentrated in meditation." Previously, Narada Muni had instructed Vyasadeva to "experience the pastimes of Lord Krsna in trance" [Bhag. 1.5.13]. The word purna ("complete") should be understood here in its full, unrestricted sense, as corroborated by the Padma Purana [Uttara-khanda 226.68]: "The words bhagavan and purusa, when free from limiting modifiers, refer to Lord Vasudeva [Krsna], the Supersoul of all." This is further verified in Sridhara Svami's COMMENTARY on the following two verses: "One who desires sense gratification should worship the moon, but one who desires nothing of material enjoyment should worship the Supersoul. A person who has broader intelligence, whether he be full of material desires, without any material desires, or desiring liberation, must by all means worship the supreme whole, the Personality of Godhead" [Bhag. 2.3.9–10]. Srila Sridhara Svami states that the words purusam param in the first of these two verses indicates the Supersoul, whose upadhi (apparently limiting qualification) is material nature, while the same word in the second verse indicates the complete Personality of Godhead, who is free from all upadhis. Thus the phrase purna-purusa [in Bhagavatam 1.7.4, quoted in TEXT 30.1] refers to the original Personality of Godhead.

COMMENTARY Analysis of Srila Vyasadeva's Trance, Part I To understand the meaning of a profound book like Srimad-Bhagavatam, it is important to understand the author's faith and experience. These two factors guide his writing, and, as in this case, if the subsequent speaker of the book shares the author's faith and experience, then the author's ideas will be accurately conveyed. To understand Srila Vyasadeva's mind, or heart, Srila Jiva Gosvami analyzes Vyasa's trance, which is the source of Srimad-Bhagavatam and reveals its essential ideas. With this analysis accomplished, Jiva makes it the basis for his explication of the whole Bhagavatam in his Sat-sandarbha. He has therefore dedicated twenty Texts of the Tattva-sandarbha (30–49) just to explore the inner purpose of Srila Vyasadeva's heart and show how Sukadeva Gosvami's heart perfectly reflects it. In the previous TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami described Sukadeva's heart even before beginning to analyze Srila Vyasadeva's. Jiva did this to invoke the blessings of Sri Suka, from whom even Srila Vyasadeva was eager to hear the Bhagavatam. The description of Sukadeva in the previous Text, moreover, was based on a single verse Suta Gosvami spoke in glorification of his guru. By contrast, Vyasadeva's trance is described in six verses. It was thus also more convenient for Jiva Gosvami to discuss Sukadeva's mood before Vyasadeva's. In doing so he follows the suci-kataha-nyaya, or "the principle of the needle and the kettle," which means that when faced with a complex undertaking one should execute the smaller tasks first. In Bhagavatam 1.7.4 (quoted in TEXT 30.1) the term bhakti-yogena means"by prema, or pure love of Godhead," because only in the state of pure love of Godhead can one see the Supreme Personality of Godhead along with His potencies. That bhakti-yogena means "by prema" is confirmed by the word amala, meaning "pure" and referring to the condition of Srila Vyasadeva's heart. According to Srila Rupa Gosvami in his Bhakti-rasamrta-sindhu (1.2.1), bhakti is of three varieties: sa bhaktih sadhanam bhavah prema ceti tridhodita. "Bhakti is said to be of three types—sadhana, bhava, and prema." One who attains prema-bhakti realizes Krsna both within and without, and this realization vanquishes both his ignorance about the self and his material miseries. Srila Rupa Gosvami further describes prema-bhakti as follows: sandrananda-visesatma Sri-krsnakarsini ca sa. "[Prema-bhakti] is specially characterized by the experience of intense bliss, and it can attract Sri Krsna" (Bhakti-rasamrta-sindhu 1.1.17). Srila Jiva Gosvami concludes, therefore, that it was by the influence of this prema-bhakti alone that Srila Vyasa realized in his trance the bhagavat-tattva along with the maya-tattva, jiva-tattva, and bhakti-tattva. In other words, he saw the original Personality of Godhead, Lord Sri Krsna, along with His external, marginal, and internal potencies. This material creation is the manifestation of Lord Krsna's external potency, and the living entities constitute His marginal potency. The living entities tend to be overcome and bewildered by Maya, the Lord's external potency. In his pure state the living entity is completely free from the external potency's influence, but when under Maya's control he considers himself material. This attitude compels him to suffer the repetition of birth and death, an unnatural, diseaselike condition for the living being. Vyasadeva saw in his trance the solution to this predicament—bhakti-yoga, or devotional service unto Lord

Adhoksaja, beginning with hearing about Him. Since most of human society is ignorant of this solution, Vyasadeva composed Srimad-Bhagavatam to propagate it. The term bhakti-yoga mentioned in Bhagavatam 1.7.6. refers to sadhana-bhakti, which is the stage of devotional service in practice. This stage is based on strict following of devotional regulations. In prema-bhakti, the advanced stage of bhakti-yoga, because one is free of all material contamination one surely and steadily engages in devotional service with spontaneous affection. The devotee who has reached this stage of advancement generally still follows the sadhana principles, but inwardly his heart is bathed in waves of blissful emotion rising from his spontaneous mood of loving service. Srila Vyasadeva composed the Satvata-samhita, Srimad-Bhagavatam, to explain the principles of bhakti-yoga in the sadhana and prema phases, along with the intermediate phase of bhava-bhakti, "devotional service with developing ecstasy." In the next Bhagavatam verse (1.7.7), bhakti means prema-bhakti because, as the verse states, only at that stage is one completely free from lamentation, delusion, and fear. The word utpadyate literally means "is generated," but here it means "becomes manifest" because prema-bhakti cannot be generated, being the internal potency of the Supreme Lord; rather, it manifests within the heart of an advancing devotee by the blessings of the Lord and His pure devotee. Srila Jiva Gosvami goes on to explain that although there are various purusa incarnations of the Supreme Lord who create, maintain, and destroy this world, the term purusam purnam in Bhagavatam 1.7.4 indicates the original Personality of Godhead, Sri Krsna. Every word in a language has its own energy (sakti) by which it conveys its meaning. Words can take on varied meanings depending on whether they exhibit their primary or their secondary energies. Each word has one primary meaning and may have several secondary meanings. When a word is not restricted by its context, one should accept its primary meaning. With the term purna-purusa in Bhagavatam 1.7.4, the unrestricted meaning (mukhya-vrtti) of the word purna (literally "complete" or "perfect") indicates Lord Sri Krsna, who is free of all limitations. Lord Visnu's purusa incarnations are also supreme and perfect, but They appear limited in some ways, and these limitations distinguish them from the purna-purusa. This distinction is implied in the Bhagavatam statement ete camsa-kalah pumsah krsnas tu bhagavan svayam: "All of the above-mentioned incarnations [listed in the preceding verses] are either plenary portions or portions of the plenary portions of the Lord, but Lord Sri Krsna is the original Personality of Godhead" (Bhag. 1.3.28). In the Bhakti-rasamrta-sindhu (2.1.43) Srila Rupa Gosvami explains how Krsna has four qualities that none of His expansions possess, namely His wonderful pastimes, His extraordinary associates, His enchanting flute-playing, and His unsurpassed beauty. This explanation of the word purna is further supported by the use of the phrase krsne parama-puruse in Bhagavatam 1.7.7. Here parama-puruse is in apposition to the name Krsna, clearly indicating equivalence. Commenting on the use of a virtually identical term—purusam param—in the Second Canto of the Bhagavatam (2.3.10), Sridhara Svami says that it refers to the purna-purusa, or Complete Person. Etymologically, purusa means "one who lies down in the city," the city here being a metaphor for the body. Thus the word purusa indicates the Supersoul within each person's body. The Supersoul is the controller of the material energy, but He is never influenced by it. Lord Sri Krsna, on the other hand, is never in contact with the material nature, though He controls it through His purusa expansions. Sridhara Svami uses the word nirupadhi ("free from all limiting adjuncts") in reference to Krsna, who is not the mere purusa but the purna-purusa. Unlike the Supersoul, Krsna is free from all upadhis. This term, upadhi, is difficult to grasp and therefore difficult to render into English. Sometimes it is translated as "conditioning," "limitation," "false designation," or "modifier." In its strict philosophical usage it means "limiting adjunct," because an upadhi's effect is to apparently modify the natural state of an object by its proximity or association, though in fact it has no integral or natural relationship with the object. For example, a naturally colorless crystal will appear reddish when held before a red flower. The reddish tinge is not part of the crystal's nature; rather, because the crystal is near the red flower, the flower "conditions" the crystal to appear reddish. In this way the flower's redness is an upadhi, or limiting adjunct, superimposed on the crystal. Similarly, the material body is an upadhi superimposed on the jiva soul. The soul is like a crystal in that he is easily influenced, or "colored," by his association. Thus the soul's proximity to the material body causes the soul to become mired in material existence and conditioned by the modes of nature. In reality both the soul and Supersoul are nirupadhi, without any limiting adjuncts, just like the Personality of Godhead. One might conclude that this nirupadhi condition of the soul implies his absolute identity with the impersonal Supreme. This conclusion is negated by the word yajeta ("should worship") in the statement yajeta purusam param, "One should worship the Supreme Person" (Bhag. 2.3.10). The root yaj means "to worship a Deity." It would be absurd to advise someone to worship a Deity who is an impersonal entity devoid of attributes. Therefore the meaning of purna-purusa is clear without our resorting to the impersonal conception of the Supreme to try to explain it. When Sridhara Svami says that the Supersoul, the purusa, has material nature as His upadhi, one should not take this statement to mean that material nature conditions the Lord as it does the jiva. The intended meaning is that He controls material nature without coming into contact with it or being influenced by it. The Supersoul is always transcendental to material nature, even while residing within it, just as a head of state always remains a free man, even when he visits the state prison. In his comment on Bhagavatam 2.3.10, Sridhara Svami interprets the word purusa to mean the Supreme Personality of Godhead, not the Supersoul, because that Supreme Person is worshiped by advanced souls desiring liberation, souls who are becoming fit to enter the spiritual planets, beyond the jurisdiction of even the Supersoul. The word adhoksaja in Bhagavatam

1.7.6 also refers to Lord Sri Krsna. Etymologically this word means “one who is beyond sense perception,” but it is also a name Lord Krsna received after killing the demoness Putana. The Hari-vamsa Purana (Visnu-parva 101.30–32) confirms this: adho ’nena sayanena sakatantara-carina raksasi nihata raudra sakuni-vesa-dharini pputana-nama ghora sa maha-kaya maha-bala visadigdham stanam raudram prayacchanti janardane pdadrsur nihatam tatra raksasim vana-gocarah punar jato ’yam ity ahur uktas tasmad adhoksajah “When baby Krsna was sleeping in a cradle under the axle of a cart, a demoness came as the flying witch called Putana to kill Him. She gave her poisoned breasts to baby Krsna, but Krsna killed her. The residents of Vraja saw Putana, who was gigantic, powerful, and terrible to look at, lying dead in the forest. But Lord Krsna was safe, and the people therefore called Him Adhoksaja, ‘He who has taken another birth under a cart’s axle.’” The verses describing Veda-vyasa’s trance (Bhag. 1.7.4–7) briefly present the quintessence of Srimad-Bhagavatam, and with it the main elements of Gaudiya Vaisnava philosophy. Therefore Srila Jiva Gosvami says more about these verses in the next Text.

Even if we consider the alternative reading of purvam instead of purnam in the verse quoted above [Bhagavatam 1.7.4], still the reference here will be to the Personality of Godhead. This is shown by the statements of Vedic sruti: “[The Lord said,] I existed here prior (purvam) to everything else” and “That [existence prior to everything else] is the essential characteristic of the Lord (purusa).” When it is said that Sri Vyasa saw the Lord, we should automatically understand that in addition Vyasa saw

His svarupa-sakti, or internal potency, just as when it is said that a person sees a full moon, the implication is that he also sees its effulgence.

Thus it is said: “You are the original Personality of Godhead, who expand Yourself all over the creations and are transcendental to the material energy. You have cast away the effects of the material energy by dint of Your spiritual potency. You are always situated in eternal bliss and transcendental knowledge” [Bhag. 1.7.23]. Therefore we understand the phrase mayam ca tad-apasrayam [in Bhagavatam 1.7.4] to mean that Maya takes shelter of Him in an inferior position, hiding from His sight; thus she does not constitute His svarupa, or essential nature. As it is said later on, “Maya, feeling ashamed, runs away from the Lord’s direct presence” [Bhag. 2.7.47].

We shall explain the Lord’s svarupa-sakti when we discuss the two verses beginning anarthopasamam saksad bhakti-yogam adhoksaje and atmaramas ca [Bhagavatam 1.7.6 and 10, respectively]. From the statement in the first of these two verses that devotional service can subdue the material energy, Maya, we can infer that the power of devotional service is a function of the Lord’s internal energy. The second verse implies that the qualities of Lord Hari constitute the svarupa-sakti’s highest function, superior even to the bliss of Brahman. These verses do not separately mention either Paramatma, the Supreme Lord’s plenary portion who controls Maya, or Brahman, the Supreme Lord’s nondifferentiated aspect. The reason for this omission is that the Paramatma and Brahman were seen to exist within the Personality of Godhead, not separately, a fact we will thoroughly demonstrate later, in the second and third Sandarbhas. Thus here, as before, the sambandhi-tattva, the essential topic of discussion in Srimad-Bhagavatam, has been defined.

COMMENTARY Analysis of Srila Vyasadeva's Trance, Part II Some editions of Srimad-Bhagavatam have the word purvam ("existing before") in place of purnam in TEXT 1.7.4. This difference does not change the import of the verse, however. The word purusa can also mean "He who existed prior to the creation": pura asit iti purusah. This phrase refers to the Supreme Lord as the source of everything. And this Supreme Lord is Krsna, as He confirms in the Bhagavad-gita (10.8): aham sarvasya prabhavah. "I am the source of everything." Being the source of everything is the essential characteristic of the purusa. Since existing prior to everything else is the idea conveyed by the adjective purvam, the phrase purusam purvam is equivalent to purusam purnam insofar as indicating the Supreme Lord, Krsna. Sri Vyasa saw the Lord's potencies along with the Lord Himself, just as one always sees the effulgent moonlight along with the full moon. The energies of the Lord are always present along with Him, inasmuch as an object's attributes are always present along with the object. In the Visnu Purana (6.5.79) the attributes of Bhagavan, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, are listed: jnana-sakti-balaisvarya-virya-tejamsy asesatah bhagavac-chabda-vacyani vina heyair gunadibhih "The word bhagavan indicates knowledge, sensory power, strength, wealth, prowess, and valor—all without limit, and all completely devoid of material qualities and their effects." The Supreme Person has multifarious potencies, of which three are primary. As the Visnu Purana (1.12.69) states, hladini sandhini samvit tvayy eka sarva-samsraye: "The hladini, sandhini, and samvit potencies exist only in You [the Supreme Lord], who are the shelter of everything." Hladini is the Lord's pleasure potency, sandhini His supporting potency, and samvit His cognition potency. These three potencies constitute the Lord's svarupa, or essential, internal nature. Srila Jiva Gosvami will give a detailed explanation of these potencies in the Bhagavat-sandarbha. In the spiritual sky these potencies are inherent in the Lord's own person, but they are also present in the individual personal forms of His associates. In TEXT 47 Srila Jiva Gosvami will identify the form of the Supreme Lord that Srila Vyasadeva saw as Krsna in Vrndavana, where the Lord is always present with His most intimate devotees. Srimati Radharani is Lord Krsna's personified pleasure potency, and with Her the Lord performs His most intimate pastimes. Therefore it should be understood that in his trance Srila Vyasa also saw Srimati Radhika along with Her associates, for the Lord is never separated from His internal potencies. Besides the Lord's three internal potencies, Vyasa saw His external potency (Maya) and His marginal potency (the jivas). Maya is not part of the Lord's svarupa. She is personally present in His entourage, but she chooses to remain out of His sight. Therefore she can never influence the Lord or His internal potencies. Generally a female influences a male by appearing before him, but Mayadevi, the female, external energy of the Supreme, cannot influence the Lord. Therefore it is said that she remains out of His view. As it is said (Bhag. 2.7.47), maya paraity abhimukhe ca vilajjamana: "Mayadevi keeps away from the Lord, feeling ashamed to come before of Him." Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana compares Maya to a maidservant who discharges her duties outside the king's inner quarters. She does not have the same privileges as his queens, who are like the Supreme Lord's internal potencies in that they can directly associate with their master at all times. Maya, the Lord's external energy, is inferior to both His svarupa-sakti and His marginal energy, the jivas. Still, she can subdue the jivas. This vulnerability of the jivas to illusion is stated in Bhagavatam 1.7.5: yaya sammohito jiva atmanam tri-gunatmakam paro 'pi manute 'nartham tat-krtam cabhipadyate "Bewildered by that external energy, the living entity, although transcendental to the three modes of material nature, thinks of himself as a material product and thus undergoes the reactions of material miseries." Although both the individual soul and the Supersoul are conscious and reside in the same material body, only the jiva is bewildered by Maya and suffers the material miseries. Maya cannot affect the Lord because He is her master; by His inconceivable power He remains forever beyond her influence. In the Bhagavad-gita (7.5) Lord Krsna tells Arjuna that His marginal energy, the jiva, is superior to His separated, material energy, Maya. One may then ask, How does the superior jiva come under the control of the inferior nature, Maya? The answer is twofold: because the jiva is infinitesimal, and also because Maya can transcend logic in her actions. In the Third Canto of Srimad-Bhagavatam (3.7.9), Maitreya Muni responds to a question from Vidura as follows: seyam bhagavato maya yan nayena virudhyate isvarasya vimuktasya karpanyam uta bandhanam "The illusory energy of the Supreme Lord acts contrary to logic [i.e., her behavior cannot be understood simply through logic]; otherwise, how is it possible that the living entity, who is conscious and liberated, becomes bound and miserable?" Commenting on this verse, Srila Visvanatha Cakravarti Thakura gives an analogy: Although the sun is powerfully effulgent, still the cloud, generated from the sun's potency, can cover it. Similarly, although the jiva is by nature superior to Maya, she still has the power to cover him. Another important point made in this section is that the description of Vyasa's trance does not explicitly mention either the Supersoul or the impersonal Brahman effulgence. The Supersoul (Paramatma) is the expansion of the Lord who presides over the affairs of the material energy. In the Bhagavad-gita (9.10) Lord Krsna says, mayadhyaksena prakrtih suyate sa-caracaram: "This material nature is working under My direction, producing all moving and nonmoving beings." Here "My" means "My Paramatma expansion's," since it is through His Paramatma feature that Lord Krsna regulates the workings of the material world. Srila Jiva Gosvami points out that since the Paramatma expands from Krsna and is entirely dependent on Him, the description of Vyasadeva's trance need not mention the Paramatma separately. The same holds true for Brahman, which is nothing but the effulgence emanating from the Lord's transcendental body. Like the Paramatma, Brahman has no existence independent of the Lord. Krsna confirms this in the Bhagavad-gita (14.27): brahmano hi pratisthaham. "I am the basis of the impersonal Brahman." According to the Nirukti dictionary, pratisthiyate asminn iti pratistha: "Pratistha means 'shelter or basis.'" Just as the sun globe is the basis of the sunshine, so Krsna is the basis of the Brahman effulgence. From this analysis of Veda-vyasa's trance, it is clear that the central subject of Srimad-Bhagavatam is the Personality of Godhead, Lord Sri Krsna, and that the process for attaining Him is bhakti-yoga. Brahman and Paramatma, being dependent manifestations of the Lord, cannot be separated from Him, but these two features are not the objects of Vyasadeva's trance and so cannot be the central subjects of His greatest work, Srimad-Bhagavatam. We should nonetheless note that one who realizes Bhagavan, Lord Krsna, automatically realizes Brahman and Paramatma, in the same way that one who acquires a million dollars automatically possesses ten dollars, one hundred dollars, and similar small sums. In the next section Srila Jiva Gosvami discusses how the living entity comes to be bound up by Maya.

The process (abhidheya) and the goal (prayojana), as we have defined them, are based on the essential difference between the Lord and the living entity. That Sri Vyasa saw this distinction is shown by the verse beginning yaya [Bhag. 1.7.5]. Although the living entity is by nature pure spirit, transcendental to the three inert material modes, when deluded by Maya he considers himself a product of those modes, the inert material body. This delusion causes the living entity to suffer unwanted consequences, namely the miseries of repeated birth and death.

Furthermore, not only does the living being consist of pure spiritual consciousness, but he also possesses consciousness as a component of his essential nature, just as light, which consists of nothing but illumination, also possesses the capacity to illumine itself and other things. That the living entity possesses consciousness is implied [in Bhagavatam 1.7.5] by the words yaya sammohitah ("deluded by that [Maya]") and manute ("he considers") and confirmed by the following words [in Bhagavad-gita 5.15]: "Living beings are bewildered because their consciousness is covered by ignorance." Thus is refuted the contrary opinion that the jiva exists only as an upadhi of Brahman and that liberation is simply the elimination of this upadhi. Here [in Bhag. 1.7.5] the phrase yaya sammohitah shows that Maya alone is responsible for deluding the living being; the Lord remains uninvolved.

Later Srimad-Bhagavatam [2.5.13] states: "The illusory energy of the Lord cannot stand in front of Him, being ashamed of her position, but those who are bewildered by her always talk nonsense, being absorbed in thoughts of 'I' and 'mine.'" Here we can infer from the phrase "being ashamed" (vilajjamanaya) that although Maya knows her work of bewildering the living beings does not please the Supreme Lord, still she cannot tolerate that they have turned their backs on Him because of their ignorance of Him, which is beginningless. Srimad-Bhagavatam [11.2.37] describes the result of the jivas' turning from the Lord: "When the living beings are attracted to something other than the Lord, they become fearful." Therefore Maya covers their real nature and entices them to identify with matter.

COMMENTARY The Living Entity Is Distinct from the Lord In this TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami shows how service to the Lord is the process of self-realization (abhidheya) and how eternal love of God is the goal (prayojana). Since love of God is eternal, the Supreme Lord and the living entities must be eternally distinct, because wherever there is service or love, the server and the served or the lover and the beloved must be separate individuals. According to the Mayavada impersonalists this distinction of individual selves exists only in the conditioned (vyavaharika) stage. In the liberated (paramarthika) stage all such distinctions dissolve because on that level Brahman alone exists. Impersonalists insist that since Brahman and the living being are absolutely one and the same, there can be no distinction of identities in the reality of Brahman. The Mayavadis go on to say that when Brahman contacts Maya, Maya acts as its upadhi and Brahman is then known as isvara (God) and the jivas. Apart from these appearances arising from Brahman's proximity to Maya, neither isvara nor the jivas exist. Concerning the jivas, featureless Brahman enters into delusion and displays the jivas' masquerade forms and personalities birth after birth—and all for no reason other than Brahman's adulteration by Maya. And this same deluded Brahman will be redeemed when he simply gives up his false designations on the strength of acquired knowledge of Brahman. All this goes counter to what Vyasadeva actually saw in His trance. He saw that the jivas are intrinsically eternal spiritual entities, separate individuals in their own right. He further saw that Maya overcomes only the jivas, not Brahman (isvara, the Personality of Godhead); indeed, He saw that Maya, far from overcoming the Supreme Lord, could not even bare to face Him. He also saw that God Himself is not directly involved with deluding the jivas. In sum, Vyasadeva realized that the Lord, the jivas, and Maya are all eternal, and that the Lord supports the other two. In Bhagavatam 1.7.5 the words sammohitah ("becoming deluded") and manute ("he then thinks") are applied to the jiva, indicating that delusion and its effects, ignorance and misery, are not part of his original nature. These two words also indicate that the jiva is both consciousness and the possessor thereof. As a light bulb simultaneously illuminates itself and the objects around it, so the jiva is simultaneously conscious of himself and objects outside himself. In other words, cognition is an intrinsic aspect of his nature, not a temporarily acquired capacity, which is what the Mayavada doctrine implies by positing that the jiva's attributes are only apparently real (as is the jiva himself) and that to gain salvation he has to acquire knowledge of his oneness with Brahman. The theistic understanding of the jivas' situation in this world, gleaned from analyzing Srila Vyasadeva's trance, is that Maya cannot tolerate the jivas' refusal to serve her Lord, and so she covers the knowledge of such rebellious jivas and imprisons them in material bodies. Maya's principal functions are to punish and to rectify the jivas who have turned away from the Personality of Godhead. Her motive is not to inflict suffering but to encourage the fallen jivas to accept rectification by inquiring into transcendental knowledge. Lord Krsna therefore says in the Bhagavad-gita (4.37) that transcendental knowledge burns all the bonds of karma in the same way that fire burns fuel, because once a person attains transcendental knowledge, Maya need no longer punish him. Sometimes, from our mundane point of view there appears to be a contradiction between the writings of the great acaryas. An example of this arises from Srila Jiva Gosvami's use in this TEXT of the term anadi ("beginningless") to describe Maya's bewilderment of the jivas. From the way Jiva Gosvami uses this word elsewhere in the Sandarbhas, it appears that he intends for his readers to understand the word literally—that Maya's conditioning of each jiva has no beginning but ends when a jiva becomes Krsna conscious. Srila Prabhupada, however, took the word anadi to mean "from time immemorial" in similar scriptural contexts, indicating that he understood the jiva's conditioning to have an untraceable beginning. He expresses his understanding of this issue in his translation of and COMMENTARY on a verse in the Caitanya-caritamrta that Lord Caitanya spoke to Sanatana Gosvami (Cc. Madhya 20.117): krsna bhuli' sei jiva anadi-bahirmukha ataeva maya tare deya samsara-duhkha "Forgetting Krsna, the living entity has been attracted by the external feature from time immemorial. Therefore the illusory energy [Maya] gives him all kinds of misery in his material existence." Purport: "When the living entity [the jiva] forgets his constitutional position as an eternal servant of Krsna, he is immediately entrapped by the illusory, external energy. The living entity is originally part and parcel of Krsna and is therefore the superior energy of Krsna.<193>[However,] he is sometimes attracted by the external, illusory energy,<193>and this is the beginning of his material life. When he enters the material energy he is subjected to the threefold time measurement—past, present, and future. Past, present, and future belong only to the material world; they do not exist in the spiritual world. The living entity is eternal, and he existed before the creation of this material world. Unfortunately he has forgotten his relationship with Krsna. The living entity's forgetfulness is described herein as anadi, which indicates that it has existed since time immemorial. One should understand that due to his desire to enjoy himself in competition with Krsna, the living entity comes into material existence." A deluded jiva retains his capacity to know the Supreme Lord. His condition is somewhat like that of a covered light bulb: the bulb's light may not be visible beyond the covering, but it still shines within. Similarly, although the conditioned jiva's ability to know the Lord is covered, it still exists. In this conditioned state the jiva misuses his mind and senses and misdirects his natural propensity to serve. Thus he suffers. But when he uses his mind and senses properly by practicing sadhana-bhakti, his true nature begins to emerge, and if he continues on the path of bhakti he attains his original identity and is established in the unending bliss of prema-bhakti. In the Paramatma-sandarbha, Srila Jiva Gosvami discusses in more detail this and other aspects of the jiva's nature. One may ask why the all-powerful Lord does not stop Maya from bewildering the jiva. Srila Jiva Gosvami answers this question in the next Text.

For His part, the Supreme Lord cannot withdraw His favor from Maya, whom He has delegated as the controller of the material creation and who has always been His devotee. Still, He wants the jivas to turn favorably toward Him, even if they must do so out of fear of Maya, and therefore He instructs them [in Bhagavad-gita 7.14]: “This divine energy of Mine, consisting of the three modes of material nature, is difficult to overcome. But those who have surrendered unto Me can easily cross beyond it.” And [in Bhagavatam 3.25.25]: “In the association of pure devotees, discussion of the pastimes and activities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is very pleasing and satisfying to the ear and the heart. By cultivating such knowledge a person gradually becomes advanced on the path of liberation, and thereafter he is freed, and his attraction becomes fixed. Then real devotion and devotional service begin.”

In His pastime form of Sri Vyasa, the Lord has very explicitly instructed the living beings in this way [namely, that they should surrender to Him so they can transcend Maya]. This we shall see shortly, in our discussion of the verse beginning anarthopasamam saksat [Bhag. 1.7.6]. Thus both the Lord and Maya have acted quite properly. But, one may object, if Maya is only an energy and an energy is the capacity to do some work and is moreover just a quality possessed by some entity, how then can Maya feel ashamed and have other, similar characteristics? The answer is that although Maya is in fact an energy, we do hear from the Vedic scriptures about female deities who preside over energies residing in the Supreme Lord. We see an example of this in the dialogue between Lord Indra and Maya in the Kena Upanisad. In any case, we shall now let this matter stand and return to the main topic of our discussion.

COMMENTARY Maya Is a Devotee of the Lord As Srila Jiva Gosvami explained in the previous Text, the Supreme Lord is not pleased that Maya has to delude the jivas; therefore Maya feels too embarrassed to face the Lord. One may ask, “If the Lord is all-powerful, why does He not intervene?” Our answer is that the Lord has appointed Maya the presiding deity of the material creation and she has been performing this service faithfully since time immemorial. Because she is His devotee, He kindly does not interfere with her service. But this reply may lead to a further doubt: Besides being all-powerful, the Supreme Lord is said to be unlimitedly merciful, always thinking of everyone's welfare. Why then does He fail to stop Maya from harassing the jivas? To this Jiva Gosvami replies that even though the Lord does not stop Maya, He teaches the jivas how to get free from her clutches by surrendering to Him. Maya will never again harass any jiva who has taken full shelter of the Supreme Lord. Still a puzzle remains: Why does the Lord allow Maya to create obstacles for the jiva even when he wants to surrender to Him? Why does He allow her to repeatedly present various allurements that prevent the jiva from discriminating between proper and improper action and thus baffle his attempts at surrendering? Srila Jiva Gosvami answers this question by citing the verse beginning satam prasangan mama virya-samvidah, which Lord Kapila speaks in Srimad-Bhagavatam (3.25.25). This verse explains that devotees of the Lord associate favorably with one another and always relish talking about the Lord's pastimes, which are a tonic for the hearts and ears of the sick and weak jivas. This tonic immunizes them against the disease of material illusion and gradually brings them back to the healthy condition of life, namely the Supreme Lord's devotional service. The Lord's only activity in the spiritual world is enjoying loving exchanges with His devotees, and His enjoyment would be disturbed by the intrusion of unhealthy jivas—that is, souls who have not become completely purified of material desire and reawakened their pure love for the Lord. Maya therefore employs various means to make sure no unfit souls bother the Lord. Because this is her assigned service to Him, He does not interfere. The Personality of Godhead has not, however, employed Maya just to inflict miseries on the jivas. She does that, but as mentioned earlier, her real purpose is to chasten the jivas, to encourage them to turn to the Lord. The punishment she metes out serves three purposes: to give the living entities the reactions for their sinful deeds, to deter them from further transgressions, and to impel them to search for a way out of this world of suffering. Since this punishment ultimately benefits the jivas by uniting them with the Personality of Godhead, He generally does not choose to come between the jivas and Maya. The governor of a state will usually not interfere when the court system sends a criminal to prison. On the contrary, he may commend the policemen who captured the wrong-doer. People do not think the governor is cruel to employ such able policemen, and in the end, when the criminal is rehabilitated and freed on parole, the former lawbreaker himself may thank the governor. So God's motive for creating the prison house of this material world is actually to induce the rebellious jivas to surrender to Him and take up loving service to Him. Only in this way can they gain liberation from Maya's clutches. In Srimad-Bhagavatam (10.87.2) Sri Sukadeva Gosvami confirms that this is the purpose of the creation: buddhindriya-manah-pranan jananam asrjat prabhuh matrartham ca bhavartham ca atmane 'kalpanaya ca "The Supreme Lord manifested the material intelligence, senses, mind, and vital air of the living entities so that they could indulge their desires for sense gratification, take repeated births to engage in fruitive activities, become elevated in future lives, and ultimately attain liberation." One may still object that even if the Supreme Lord is not actively cruel, He is indifferent to the plight of the jivas. This is another mistaken notion. Far from being indifferent to the jivas' suffering, the Lord frequently appears in this world to enlighten the fallen populace on the pre TEXT of educating such intimate associates of His as Arjuna and Uddhava. Sometimes He incarnates as Veda-vyasa or as another instructor to preach the message of bhakti and uplift the wretched jivas. All this He does out of His causeless mercy upon the fallen jivas, who, as we have learned from the pramana portion of Sri Tattva-sandarbha, can never understand anything beyond the material world by their own endeavors. So it is out of His causeless mercy that the Supreme Lord gives the entrapped jivas access to spiritual knowledge through the Vedas. Later on, as the Kali-yuga begins and the jivas all but lose their ability to comprehend spiritual knowledge, He further helps them by explaining the same message in the Itihasas and Puranas. Finally, He reveals the essence of all knowledge in the form of Srimad-Bhagavatam. So it can hardly be said that the Lord is indifferent to the plight of the jivas. Once a jiva takes advantage of the Lord's arrangement for spiritual education and comes to the point of transcendental realization, he need not fear any punishment for his previous misdeeds, no matter how dreadful they were. As the Lord says in the Bhagavad-gita (4.37): yathaidhamsi samiddho 'gnir bhasma-sat kurute 'rjuna jïanagnih sarva-karmani bhasma-sat kurute tatha "As a blazing fire turns firewood to ashes, O Arjuna, so does the fire of knowledge burn to ashes all reactions to material activities." Thus the Lord confirms that the punishment of the jivas is meant not for inflicting suffering on them but for awakening them to the knowledge that will lead them to freedom from all suffering and to eternal life in the spiritual world. Yet another doubt may be raised: If the punishment inflicted on the jivas is for their ultimate good, why are they also allowed to enjoy in this world? If they were simply thrown into an ocean of ceaseless misery, they would have no choice but to quickly take complete shelter of the Personality of Godhead. We address this doubt with a twofold reply: First, we point out that ceaseless misery is not good for developing transcendental understanding because one's mind becomes too disturbed to contemplate scriptural truths. Second, ceaseless misery is not necessary because any jiva with even a little rudimentary transcendental knowledge will realize that there is no real happiness in this material world. In the Bhagavad-gita (8.15) Lord Krsna characterizes this world as temporary and devoid of happiness: anityam asukham lokam. The so-called happiness one experiences here is nothing but a temporary cessation or diminution of misery. It is like the pleasure felt by a man who is repeatedly dunked in water and then brought to the surface just before drowning. Upon gulping down the life-giving air he feels great relief and joy, but such happiness is really only the temporary absence of continual misery. Lord Krsna therefore advises us not to strive for the so-called happiness of this material world: sama-duhkha-sukham dhiram so 'mrtatvaya kalpate."One who remains equipoised in both misery and happiness is qualified for liberation" (Bg. 2.15). Only such a person can taste real happiness; others experience only the illusion of happiness. In conclusion, therefore, the Lord has designed a two-part program for both chastening and rehabilitating the jivas: On the one hand, Maya kicks them, and on the other, the Lord instructs them through various incarnations, the Vedic scriptures, and His pure devotees. Thus Maya's actions and the Lord's perfectly complement one another. Although Maya is the Lord's material energy, she also exists in her own personal form. All the energies of the Lord have their personal features. (Srila Jiva Gosvami will discuss this point in more detail in Sri Bhagavat-sandarbha.) That Maya has a personal form is evident from a dialogue between Lord Indra and Mayadevi narrated in the third chapter of the Kena Upanisad: Once there was a war between the demigods and the demons. After a long struggle, the demigods prevailed by the Supreme Lord's mercy, but they mistakenly ascribed their victory to their own valor and became proud. To humble them, the Lord appeared before them in the guise of a Yaksa. Unable to identify the Yaksa, they appointed Agni, the fire-god, to find out who He was. When Agni asked the Yaksa to identify Himself, He placed a straw in front of Agni and said, "Burn it." With all his power Agni could not burn the straw. Then Vayu, the air-god, was sent to identify the Yaksa, but he could not blow the straw away. Next Lord Indra approached the Yaksa, but the mysterious personality disappeared. Finally Mayadevi appeared to Indra in the form of Uma and told him that the Yaksa was in fact the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Many similar accounts in the Vedas and Puranas show that Maya and other energies of the Lord have their own personal forms. Thus the description of how Vyasa saw Maya standing behind the Lord out of embarrassment is not figurative. One more question might be asked: If Maya, the predominating deity of the material energy, can manage all her own affairs, what need is there for the Paramatma to control this world? Lord Krsna answers in the Bhagavad-gita (14.4): sarva-yonisu kaunteya murtayah sambhavanti yah tasam brahma mahad yonir aham bija-pradah pita "It should be understood that all species of life, O son of Kunti, are made possible by birth in this material nature, and that I am the seed-giving father." Just as a woman cannot conceive a child without the help of a potent man, Maya cannot manage the material world without the help of the Paramatma. Maya has her innate potencies for serving the Supreme Lord, but still she needs His help in carrying out her duties. For this reason Vyasa saw that she was dependent on the Lord, a fact Krsna confirms in the Bhagavad-gita (9.10) when He says that this material nature, which is one of His energies, is ultimately working under His direction. The next TEXT further explains Sri Vyasa's trance.

tatra jivasya tadrsa-cid-rupatve 'pi paramesvarato vailaksanyam tad-apasrayam iti yaya sammohita iti ca darsayati. Like the Lord, the jiva is purely spiritual, yet still he is different from the Lord. This truth is indicated by the words tad-apasrayam ("Maya is outside Him yet supported by Him," [in Bhagavatam. 1.7.4]) and yaya sammohitah ("deluded by Maya," [in Bhag. 1.7.5]).

COMMENTARY The Jiva Is Conscious and Distinct from the Lord In Srimad-Bhagavatam 1.7.4 the words used to describe Maya's relationship with the Lord are tad-apasrayam. This phrase indicates that in His trance Srila Vyasadeva saw that the Supreme Personality of Godhead supports Maya and that she has no influence over Him. The prefix apa means "separate" and "inferior." Maya is separate from the Lord in the sense that she is not one of His internal energies. That she is ashamed to appear in front of the Lord indicates she is inferior to both Him and His internal potencies. For this reason she cannot influence Him, though she is dependent on Him. Therefore, as mentioned earlier, she has been compared to a maidservant who works outside a king's inner apartments. While unable to influence the Lord or His internal potencies, Maya can influence the jiva, as the words yaya sammohitah indicate. Being part and parcel of God, the jiva is conscious by nature, yet he is not all-powerful like God, for his potencies are limited. Thus the Lord controls Maya, and she controls the limited jivas when they are not united with Him in bhakti-yoga. Just as sparks separated from a fire lose their brilliance but not their existence, so when the living beings are separated from the Lord they forget their nature and are absorbed in illusion. The Supreme Lord, however, is never affected by illusion. Thus jivas are different from the Lord, though they are qualitatively equal with Him in some respects. Commenting on Bhagavatam 1.7.4, Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana points out that besides seeing the Personality of Godhead, Maya, and the jiva, Srila Vyasa also saw the time energy, as indicated by such verbs as apasyat (“He saw”), sammohitah (“he is bewildered”), and manute (“he considers”). How is this? Because all these verbs indicate action, which in turn implies the influence of time. As the Bhallaveya-sruti states, atha ha vava nityani purusah prakrtir atma kalah: “The Lord, material nature, the living entity, and time are certainly all eternal.” Time’s eternality is also mentioned by Parasara Muni in the Visnu Purana (1.2.26): anadir bhagavan kalo nanto ’sya dvija vidyate avyucchinnas tatas tv ete sarga-sthity-anta-samyamah “O twice-born Maitreya, supremely powerful time has no beginning or end. Thus the cycle of creation, maintenance, and annihilation continues perpetually.” And in the Bhagavad-gita (13.20) Lord Krsna says : prakrtim purusam caiva viddhy anadi ubhav api vikarams ca gunams caiva viddhi prakrti-sambhavan “Material nature and the living entities should be understood to be beginningless. Their transformations and the modes of matter are products of material nature.” In commenting on this verse in his Sarartha-varsini, Srila Visvanatha Cakravarti Thakura says, maya-jivayor api mac-chaktitvena anaditvat tayoh samsleso ’py anadir iti bhavah: “[Lord Krsna says:] ‘Since both Maya and the jiva are My energies, both exist since time immemorial. Therefore the jiva has been in contact with Maya since time immemorial.’” It follows from this that the jiva’s karma has been acting since time immemorial as well. Srila Vyasadeva acknowledges that this is the nature of karma in sutra 2.1.35 of the Vedanta: na karmavibhagad iti cen nanaditvat. “One might object that the law of karma cannot explain the inequality in the universe because to begin with everyone must be equal. But this objection is not valid, since the cycle of creation has no beginning. Inasmuch as creation has no beginning, karma also has no beginning.” Apart from karma, the other four entities Srila Vyasa saw—the Personality of Godhead, the jiva, material nature, and time—are eternal, without beginning or end. Of these four, the Supreme Lord and the jiva are conscious spirit, but the Lord is infinite and the jiva is atomic in size. Time is not conscious, but it is free from the control of the material modes. It is the cause of the threefold division of past, present, and future. The material energy is inert and is composed of three modes—goodness, passion and ignorance. Matter thus undergoes transformations in time and is the medium through which we perceive the three divisions of time. Although karma has been controlling every conditioned soul since time immemorial, karma can be brought to a close for jivas who perfect the practice of devotional service to Lord Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. All this Srila Vyasadeva also saw. To enlighten the conditioned jivas about these all-important topics, He compiled the Satvata-samhita, Srimad-Bhagavatam. In the next eight Texts, Srila Jiva Gosvami shows that Sri Vyasa’s experience refutes the popular monistic philosophy of Sri Sankaracarya.

yarhy eva yad ekam cid-rupam brahma mayasrayata-balitam vidya-mayam tarhy eva tan maya-visayatapannam avidya-paribhutam cety ayuktam iti jivesvara-vibhago 'vagatah. tatas ca svarupa-samarthya-vailaksanyena tad dvitayam mitho-vilaksana-svarupam evety agatam. If it is indeed true that the one undivided Brahman, whose very nature is pure spirit, is the foundation of material illusion and also embodies the liberating force of knowledge, then it is illogical to say that Brahman falls under Maya's influence and is overcome by ignorance. Thus we can understand that the jiva and the Supreme Lord are separate entities. Since both their identities and their capabilities are different, the jiva and the Lord are essentially distinct.

COMMENTARY The Jiva Is Not the Supreme Brahman Srila Jiva Gosvami has carefully analyzed Srila Vyasadeva's trance, and now, on the basis of that analysis, he presents arguments against the Mayavada theory of the absolute oneness of the Supreme Soul and the jiva souls. The ideas of the Mayavadis are completely antagonistic to devotional service and are therefore one of the greatest obstacles on the path of real spiritual progress. Srila Raghunatha dasa Gosvami compared impersonalism to a tigress who devours one's spiritual life. He said, kathah mukti-vyaghrya na srnu kila sarvatma-gilanih: "My dear mind, never listen to talk about liberation, which is like a tigress who swallows everything, including the self" (Manah-siksa 4). Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu also gave a stern warning about the Mayavada philosophy to those who aspire to understand the Personality of Godhead in truth. He said, mayavadi-bhasya sunile haya sarva-nasa: "Hearing Mayavada philosophy completely destroys one's spiritual life" (Cc. Madhya 6.169). Ultimately, He said, because the Mayavadis describe Absolute Reality as featureless they are the greatest offenders against Sri Krsna, the Supreme Lord. Sri Madhvacarya presented forceful refutations of the Mayavada theory in a similar vein. One of his most impressive efforts in this line was his Mayavada-khandanam. In this and other works he exposed the way Mayavadis misuse grammatical analysis and employ faulty logic, which they resort to in their vain attempt to prove the absolute nondifference between Brahman and the jiva. In the same mood, Srila Jiva Gosvami will refute the Mayavada theory in the next few Texts and conclude by exhorting his readers to further investigate the Mayavadis' "unintelligible concoctions." In other words, Jiva Gosvami expects the followers of Sri Gauranga Mahaprabhu to consider it their duty to defeat the impersonalists' word jugglery in as many ways as possible. When the Mayavadis are so thoroughly exposed that not one of the pillars supporting their errant doctrine is left standing, then only fools will fall prey to their misleading ideas. The impersonalists headed by Sri Sankaracarya base their tenets on the Vedanta-sutra and the eleven principal Upanisads, and they also try to support their arguments with statements from the Bhagavad-gita. Jiva Gosvami contends, however, that their interpretations contradict what Srila Vyasadeva experienced in trance, which is narrated in the Srimad-Bhagavatam, the essence of the Upanisads, the Vedanta-sutra, and the Puranas. Mayavadis claim that ultimate reality is nondual, pure consciousness, without form or attributes. They try to define ultimate reality only in negative terms, and so they repeat the aphorism neti neti, "Not this, not that." To support their arguments they cite such Vedic declarations as sarvam khalv idam brahma ("Indeed, all this is Brahman"; Chandogya Up. 3.14.1), ekam evadvitiyam ("Brahman is one without a second"'; Chandogya Up. 6.2.1), vijïanam anandam brahma ("Brahman is consciousness and bliss"; Brhad-aranyaka Up. 3.9.28), and neha nanasti kiïcana ("Ultimately no variety exists in this world"; Brhad-aranyaka Up. 4.4.19). But then to explain the obvious variety in this world, the Mayavadis are forced to introduce the idea of some beginningless entity called Maya, or illusion. The Mayavadis say that this Maya cannot be defined as either existing or not exisiting. They further say that Maya has two aspects—vidya (knowledge) and avidya (ignorance). Somehow or other some part of Brahman comes in contact with Maya, and the result is illusion for that portion of Brahman. Brahman contacts both vidya and avidya. When the totality of Brahman contacts vidya, then the personal Godhead, known as isvara, comes into being. And when small parts of Brahman contact avidya, they become the jivas. According to the Mayavada doctrine, the difference between isvara and jiva is not intrinsic or eternal; it is due only to upadhis, or the apparent limitations superimposed on Brahman by Maya's vidya and avidya potencies. When a jiva acquires spiritual knowledge and thus removes these upadhis from himself, he realizes himself to be the unlimited, nonvariegated Brahman. This attainment is supposed to be the perfection of spiritual life. In support of this concept, the Sankarites quote the Vedic statement rte jïanan na muktih: "There is no liberation without knowledge." A favorite analogy the Mayavadis use to explain how unlimited Brahman becomes limited as the jivas is that of the sky and clay pots. Just as the vast sky seems to become limited in a pot and is then known as "the sky in the pot," so the unlimited Brahman seems to become limited by the jivas' subtle and gross material bodies. When a pot is broken there is no longer a distinction between the sky in the pot and the all-pervading sky, and similarly when a jiva's false identity is dissolved the jiva no longer appears different from Brahman. Actually, the Mayavadis explain, the apparent distinction between the sky in the pot and the all-pervading sky did not really exist even when the pot was intact, and in the same way the difference between the individual self and the total Supreme is always illusory. The Advaita monists even see confirmation of all this in Srimad-Bhagavatam, as in the final instructions to Pariksit Maharaja imparted by Sukadeva, the leader of all transcendentalists: ghate bhinne yathakasa akasah syad yatha pura evam dehe mrte jivo brahma sampadyate punah "When a pot is broken, the portion of sky within the pot remains as the element sky, just as before. In the same way, when the gross and subtle bodies die, the living entity within again becomes the Supreme" (Bhag. 12.5.5). Later in the same set of instructions, Sukadeva also says, aham brahma param dhama brahmaham paramam param evam samiksann atmanam atmany adhaya niskale "'I am the Absolute Truth, the supreme abode, and that Absolute Truth, the supreme destination, is I.' Meditating like this, merge yourself into that nameless universal self" (Bhag. 12.5.11). These statements of course need proper explanation, but when the Mayavadis explain them they do so without regard to the actual context. In fact, only by taking them out of con TEXT can one translate them as shown above. In the fifty-second TEXT of the Tattva-sandarbha, Srila Jiva Gosvami will briefly discuss why such verses seem to have an impersonal slant, and in Sri Paramatma-sandarbha, sections 72–84, he will provide a more detailed discussion. Srila Jiva Gosvami here begins countering the Mayavada philosophy by establishing the essential distinction between jiva and isvara. His first point is, as we have learned from the account of Vyasadeva's trance, that Maya controls only the jiva and not the Supreme Lord. Indeed, Maya is dependent upon the Lord and completely controlled by Him. The same Brahman cannot be the controller as well as the controlled, because ignorance and knowledge cannot exist simultaneously in the one undivided reality, just as light and darkness cannot occupy the same point in space. The jiva's abilities and qualities are different from those of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This difference, moreover, is not a product of illusion. By constitution the jiva is atomic in size, and thus he is vulnerable to Maya's influence when he disassociates himself from the Supreme Lord. But by surrendering to the Lord he can free himself from the shackles of Maya. Srila Vyasa saw all this in His trance. In the next Text, Srila Jiva Gosvami states that the difference between the jiva and the Lord is real and not just empirical.

na copadhi-taratamya-maya-pariccheda-pratibimbatvadi-vyavasthaya tayor vibhagah syat. Also, the Mayavadis cannot explain this difference between the jiva and the Lord simply as a division or reflection of Brahman into a hierarchy of upadhis.

COMMENTARY The Jiva Is Not Merely an Upadhi The Mayavada philosophers hold that there is one reality—the formless, indivisible, non-variegated, impersonal Brahman—and they have various theories for explaining the apparent existence of jivas and isvara. The two theories mentioned in this section are the most prevalent, and both have been expressed in several modified forms. According to the pariccheda-vada, the one indivisible Brahman appears divided into many embodied jivas because of various upadhis, just as the one great sky (mahakasa) appears divided by being contained in various pots (ghatakasa). This theory proposes that no real difference exists between the sky inside a pot and the sky outside. The distinction is assumed only for practical purposes. Once the pot is broken and the apparent distinction removed, the sky inside the pot and the great sky are understood to be one. Similarly, the proponents of pariccheda-vada say, there is so difference between the embodied jiva and Brahman. The jiva's limiting adjunct, his subtle body, is actually a false covering superimposed on the jiva after he comes into contact with Maya's avidya potency, and it is this false covering alone that makes him appear to be separate from Brahman. Thus when Brahman is limited by subtle bodies it becomes the jivas. But when it is limited by vidya it is called isvara. This doctrine of separation was formulated by Vacaspati Misra, the ninth-century author of the Bhamati COMMENTARY on Sankara's Vedanta-sutra-bhasya. According to pratibimba-vada, when the formless, undivided Brahman is reflected in the various subtle bodies made of avidya, it appears to be many, just as the one sun reflected in various receptacles of water appears to be many. In this analogy, the sun remains uninfluenced by the agitation of the water in which it is reflected, even while the reflection is influenced. Similarly, Brahman is never influenced by the changes that its reflections, the jivas, undergo. Indeed, the happiness and distress the jivas experience are only illusions resulting from their conditioned, or reflected, state. When a jiva frees himself from illusion and achieves liberation, he reverts to his original Brahman consciousness. This is another Mayavada version of how the jivas come into being. According to the proponents of pratibimba-vada, the same Brahman that becomes the jivas when reflected in Maya's avidya potency becomes isvara, the creator Godhead, when reflected in her vidya potency. By virtue of this contact with Maya, Brahman assumes a personal but temporary form that, unlike the jiva, is immune to Maya's influence. Nonetheless, Brahman's manifestation in the personal feature of isvara is the work of Maya and is inferior to the all-pervading Brahman. The pratibimba-vadis say that all the incarnations of God described in the Vedic literature are manifestations of isvara—the results of Brahman's combining with Maya's vidya potency. Like the jivas, such personal manifestations of God have subtle and gross bodies, but unlike the jivas They neither accept their bodies because of past karma nor are bound by the reactions of Their activities. Thus jiva and isvara are distinct. The Mayavadis try to support their ideas by citing scripture. For example, from the Suka-rahasya Upanisad (2.12) they quote the statement karyopadhir ayam jivah karanopadhir isvarah: “The jiva is a reflection [of Brahman] in the antah-karana, or heart, and the isvara is a reflection in Maya.” Also: yatha hy ayam jyotir atma vivasvan apo bhittva bahudhaiko ’nugacchan upadhina kriyate bheda-rupo devah ksetresv evam ajo ’yam atma. “Just as the one effulgent sun appears to be many when reflected in many pots of water, so the one unborn atma, Brahman, appears to be many beings when reflected in many bodies.” (This TEXT is quoted by Baladeva Vidyabhusana in his Tattva-sandarbha COMMENTARY .) Some Advaita monists also cite Srimad-Bhagavatam in support of their pratibimba-vada and pariccheda-vada: na hi satyasya nanatvam avidvan yadi manyate nanatvam chidrayor yadvaj jyotisor vatayor iva “This is certain: there is no variety in the Absolute Truth. If an ignorant person thinks there is, his understanding is just like thinking there is a difference between the sky above and the sky in a pot, or between the sun and its reflection in water, or between the air outside the body and the air inside” (Bhag. 12.4.30). Srila Jiva Gosvami, following in Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu’s footsteps, contends that Sri Vyasadeva’s experience in trance contradicts both of these Mayavada doctrines—namely, pariccheda-vada and pratibimba-vada. This contradiction is evident from the analysis Jiva Gosvami has already presented, but in the upcoming Texts he will demonstrate it further by pointing out the specific defects in these doctrines.

If we assume that these upadhis are empirically real and not illusory, still, because Brahman is not affected by anything, it cannot be delimited by them. Moreover, Brahman can cast no reflection because it is devoid of attributes, all-pervading, and indivisible. Since Brahman has no attributes, it can have no relation with upadhis; since it is all-pervading, it cannot be divided into a reflected object and its reflection; and since it is indivisible and uniform, it cannot be seen. In these respects Brahman resembles the sky. Because the sky is invisible, reflections are cast not by the sky itself but by limited luminous parts of the sky [namely the heavenly bodies].

COMMENTARY Flaws in Pratibimba-vada and Pariccheda-vada In Advaita monism, existence (satta) is understood on three different levels—pratibhasika (merely apparent reality), vyavaharika (ordinary, empirical reality), and paramarthika (absolute reality).

Pratibhasika existence is perceived in such states as dreams and illusions but ceases when normal consciousness returns. One may, for example, mistake a rope for a snake in semidarkness, but this perception ceases as soon as light is shed on the rope. Therefore, the snake perceived in the rope was a merely apparent reality, or pratibhasika-satta. It cannot be considered an empirical reality because it is private and temporary. According to the Mayavadis, empirical reality, vyavaharika-satta, refers to our perception of the material world in ordinary waking consciousness. Ultimate reality, paramarthika-satta, is present in all objects of the material world, pervading them as the blissful source of all manifest varieties. In his Drg-drsya-viveka (20) Sripada Sankaracarya writes: asti bhati priyam rupam nama cety amsa-païcakam adya-trayam brahma-rupam jagad-rupam tato dvayam "Objects in the material world have five characteristics—existence, perceivability, attractiveness, form, and name. Of these, the first three belong to Brahman and the others to the world." The last two items, form and name, are products of Maya and thus constitute only the empirical reality; they do not exist on the absolute level. They are manifest only as long as one has not realized Brahman. The other three are Brahman itself as perceived in empirical reality. The Mayavadis claim that the paramarthika-satta, or absolute reality, is impersonal Brahman, which, unlike the other two realities, cannot be negated by experience and scriptural authority. Just as dreams cease when one wakes, the material world will cease to exist when one becomes Brahman realized. There is no higher reality than absolute Brahman, no higher existence that can negate the real existence of Brahman in the past, present, or future. On the level of Brahman existence, there is no distinction between knowledge, the knower, and the object of knowledge. All three fuse into one absolute reality. The two lower realities, pratibhasika and vyavaharika, are not perceived on this level of consciousness. Srila Jiva Gosvami refutes both the pariccheda-vada (the theory of division) and the pratibimba-vada (the theory of reflection) by considering the Sankarites' explanation of the upadhis covering Brahman as features of the two lower realities: These upadhis can never be real aspects of the absolute reality, since that would introduce duality on the nondual plane. In the case of pariccheda-vada, the upadhis can be either empirical reality (anavidyaka) or apparent reality (avidyaka). Srila Jiva Gosvami shows the fault in both of these alternatives. If the upadhis are empirically real, Brahman still cannot be limited by them because pure Brahman is unconditioned by anything else, empirical or otherwise. In the Bhagavad-gita (13.13) Lord Sri Krsna confirms this: jïeyam yat tat pravaksyami yaj jïatvamrtam asnute anadi mat-param brahma na sat tan nasad ucyate "I shall now explain the knowable, knowing which you will taste the eternal. Brahman, the supreme spirit, beginningless and subordinate to Me, lies beyond the cause and effect of this material world." Thus no upadhis can limit Brahman. But in the opinion of Sankaracarya, this Gita verse says, "I shall tell you that which has to be known, knowing which one attains immortality; it is the beginningless, supreme Brahman, which is said to be neither being nor nonbeing." In commenting on this verse Sankara writes: idam tu jïeyam atindriyatvena sabdaika-pramana-gamyatvan na ghatadi-vad ubhaya-buddhy-anugata-pratyaya-visayam ity ato na san na asad ity ucyate. yat tv uktam viruddham ucyate jïeyam tan na sat tan na asad ucyate iti. na viruddham. "anyad eva tad viditad atho aviditad adhi" iti srute. "But this knowable Brahman, being beyond the reach of the senses, can be understood only by means of hearing revealed knowledge from scripture. Therefore, unlike the clay pot, etc., it can never be said to exist or not exist, and thus it can never be called sat or asat. "Objection: But what you said about Brahman, the object of knowledge—that it is neither existent nor nonexistent—is contradictory. "Answer: No, it is not, because the sruti states: 'That [Brahman] is different from the known and from the unknown, for it is beyond both'" (Kena Up. 1.3). So according to the Mayavadis' own version, Brahman is beyond sense perception, beyond empirical existence and nonexistence. Such being the case, if the upadhis of Brahman are empirically real they can never limit the undivided and indivisible Brahman and produce the jivas. Therefore the Vedas say, agrhyo na grhyate: "The untouchable [Brahman] cannot be perceived" (Brhad-aranyaka Up. 9.26). Brahman being neither pierceable nor divisible, it cannot be broken or delimited into jivas the way one might break a large stone into pebbles. If we hypothetically grant that the upadhis can divide Brahman into jivas, then in that case neither the jivas nor Brahman itself should be called eternal. But the Bhagavad-gita, which the Mayavadis accept as authoritative, describes both the jiva and Brahman as eternal. In Chapter Thirteen, TEXT 20, Lord Krsna says that the jiva is anadi, beginningless. The same is stated in texts 20–24 of the Second Chapter. Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana states that even if the above point is overlooked, other inconsistencies abound in the Mayavada conception: The jivas and isvara move from one place to another, but Brahman is all-pervading. Somehow portions of Brahman become limited by upadhis to manifest as the jivas. When a given jiva moves from one place to another, either Brahman also moves along with it or it does not. But Brahman's moving from place to place is impossible, because when something moves it leaves one location and then occupies another, where it was absent before. It is absurd to propose this situation for Brahman, since Brahman is always present everywhere. On the other hand, if Brahman does not move with the jivas, we must assume that when a jiva is moving from place to place its upadhi constantly delimits new portions of Brahman, simultaneously releasing the previously delimited portions. This reduces Brahman, the absolute reality, to a toy in the hands of its upadhis, a proposal that is also absurd. If it is instead proposed that all of Brahman is grasped by its upadhis, the problem of movement can be solved, but then there remains no Brahman free from upadhis, meaning that there is no chance for the jivas' liberation or for useful discussion of philosophy; all of existence would consist of the deluded Brahman, and there would be no liberated domain to aspire for. If it is countered that Brahman is not the basis for its upadhis and thus they can move independently of Brahman, this means that even at the liberated level these independent upadhis will continue to exist. Srila Jiva Gosvami concludes that the interpretation of pariccheda-vada in terms of Brahman's upadhis being empirically real is invalid. He then goes on to refute pratibimba-vada, the theory of reflection. Brahman, Srila Jiva states, can cast no reflection in its upadhis, or subtle bodies of material existence, because Brahman is devoid of all attributes. Only an object possessing attributes like form and color can have a reflection. If an object is invisible, how can it be reflected in anything? If it is countered that the sky, although invisible, casts a reflection in water, Jiva Gosvami replies that it is in fact the stars and planets in the sky that cast reflections in water, not the sky itself. If the sky could cast a reflection, then the wind would also be able to cast one, because air is a grosser material element than sky. According to modern science, the bluish background seen behind the visible bodies in the firmament is an optical illusion created by the refracted sunlight passing through the atmosphere. No concrete, underlying object is there to cast a reflection, only the invisible firmament. Hence the analogy comparing Brahman to the sky being reflected in water is inappropriate here. Furthermore, we have already shown that, according to the Mayavadis, Brahman is beyond empirical existence and nonexistence and thus also beyond sensory perception. It is foolish to then propose that Brahman reflects as the jivas. But Srila Jiva Gosvami is willing to grant the opposition a respite and hypothetically accept their premise that Brahman can reflect in upadhis, in which case all-pervading Brahman must also exist in the upadhis, in which it supposedly reflects. But if the reflected object, Brahman, is already present in the reflecting medium, the upadhis, how will it reflect there? As a mirror cannot reflect in itself, so Brahman cannot reflect in itself. Even if somehow it manages to reflect in itself, how will it be possible to distinguish the reflected Brahman from the original Brahman already present in the upadhis? The two will be coincident, allowing no basis for distinguishing one from the other. How can the reflected Brahman be singled out to be termed jiva and made to suffer? What was His offense? Why is it that the reflected Brahman becomes affected by upadhis and not the original Brahman, although the reflection is no different from the original? The Mayavadis have also told us that Brahman has no internal parts: niskalam niskriyam santam. "Brahman contains no limbs or parts. It is inactive and peaceful" (Svetasvatara Up. 6.79). But a formless, indivisible object cannot have a relation with any upadhi, real or imaginary, and thus it cannot reflect in any medium. In response to this contention, the Advaita monists cite the analogy of a clear crystal that appears red when placed in front of a red flower. Just as the red color, which is formless and partless, casts its reflection on the crystal, so it is possible for Brahman to be reflected in its upadhis. But this is a faulty argument. The red color in this analogy belongs to the flower, which projects its image through the crystal, although in the crystal we perceive only the flower's color. The color exists simply as the flower's attribute and cannot sustain itself independently. A flower, moreover, has shape, parts, and attributes. In sum, neither the color nor the flower compares adequately to Brahman. Therefore, like the analogy of the reflected sky, this analogy has also been applied incongruously by the Mayavadis. The sruti says, asango hy ayam purusah: "Brahman is free from any relation or association" (Brhad-aranyaka Up. 4.3.15). Therefore Brahman cannot engage in any relationship with a reflecting medium. The Mayavadis interpret the word asanga here as meaning "devoid of real relations." This implies that Brahman can have nonreal relations or associations, created by Maya, but we have already shown that a formless Brahman has no ability to manifest a reflection in an empirically real medium or have any other relation with such a medium, and this impossibility is even more definite with respect to unreal relations with unreal mediums. The Prasna Upanisad (4.10) confirms this when it states, tad acchayam asariram alohitam: "That Brahman casts no shadow, has no body, and is colorless." We can thus conclude that upadhis—whether real or unreal—can never impose themselves on pure Brahman. They affect only the deluded jivas. In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami presents more arguments against the Mayavada doctrine, hypothetically considering Brahman's upadhis as real.

Moreover, if there were empirically real upadhis delimiting Brahman (pariccheda) or acting as the medium of its reflection (pratibimba), a person could not escape from them simply by knowing he is one with the Supreme in essence. And if the Advaita monists propose that freedom from upadhis is due to the influence of the supreme entity, who is called tat, then they agree with us!

COMMENTARY Refutations of Pratibimba-vada and Pariccheda-vada Srila Jiva Gosvami here exposes further complications that arise from accepting Brahman's upadhis as empirically real. The Advaita monists believe that a jiva can become free from bondage to his upadhis by becoming educated through the srutis. This is the idea of the following sruti statements: Tat tvam asi: "Thou art that" (Chandogya Up. 6.8.7). Tad atmanam eva vedaham brahmasmi: "It knew Itself: 'I am Brahman'" (Brhad-aranyaka Up. 1.4.10). Tat tvam asy-adi-vakyebhyah jïanam moksasya sadhanam: "The means to liberation is knowledge arising from dictums such as 'Thou art that'" (Brhan-naradiya Pur. 35.68). Brahma veda brahmaiva bhavati: "He who knows that Brahman becomes Brahman" (Mundaka Up. 3.2.9). Tarati sokam atma-vit: "The knower of the Self transcends grief" (Chandogya Up. 7.1.3). Thus, with the apparent support of Vedic scripture, the Mayavada school claims that liberation is achieved through knowledge. Indeed, the sruti says, tam eva viditva ati mrtyum eti/ nanyah pantha vidyate 'yanaya: "Only by knowing that [Brahman] can one transcend death; there is no other way to cross over" (Svetasvatara Up. 3.8). And in the Bhagavad-gita (4.37) Lord Krsna says: yathaidamsi samiddho 'gnir bhasma-sat kurute 'rjuna jïanagnih sarva-karmani bhasma-sat kurute tatha "As a blazing fire turns firewood to ashes, O Arjuna, so does the fire of knowledge burn to ashes all reactions to material activities." And again in the fourth chapter, verses 38 and 39, the Lord says, na hi jïanena sadrsam pavitram iha vidyate: "Nothing is as purifying as knowledge"; and jïanam labdhva param santim acirenadhigacchati: "Having attained this knowledge, one quickly attains the supreme peace." In effect, the Mayavadis think the jiva is like a rich man's infant son who has gotten lost in a busy public place and is then found by a poor man. As a result of this misfortune, compounded by the son's ignorance of his true identity, the baby grows up in a humble setting as the child of the poor man. Later the child may be recognized by one of his father's servants. As soon as the boy comes to realize he is the son of a wealthy man, all his poverty evaporates. He does not have to toil hard to get rid of this poverty. In fact, he was never really poor, just ignorant, and thus simply coming to a proper understanding of his real identity was sufficient to reverse the situation. Another example: A person forgets that he put his watch in his pocket and searches for hours, but without any luck. Finally, a friend comes along and sees the watch strap sticking out of his pocket and tells him, "Your watch is in your pocket." At once the person has the watch and his anxiety is gone. Knowledge alone was sufficient to relieve his distress. Similarly, the Mayavadis say, the jiva is nothing but deluded Brahman. As soon as he realizes this by properly hearing the Vedic instructions, he becomes liberated. He then understands that Brahman is not distant from him, for in fact he himself is Brahman. His only obstacle was ignorance, which hearing the Vedas has now removed. Of course, for the process to be effective one's heart must be pure, and to achieve this purity Sripada Sankaracarya recommends the sadhana-catustaya, or "fourfold practice," consisting of discrimination, dispassion, "the six achievements," and eagerness for liberation.

According to Sankara, one of the four maha-vakyas, or essential statements of all Vedic instructions, is tat tvam asi: "You are that [Brahman]." This statement underlines the oneness of the jiva with Brahman. But, we have to ask, since Brahman is all-pervading and all-knowing while the jiva is atomic and limited in knowledge, how can they be the same? To this the Mayavadis reply that tat tvam asi should not be understood in its primary, literal sense but only in a secondary sense. One can recognize the actual oneness between the jiva and Brahman when one puts aside their opposing qualities—omnipresence and omniscience versus atomic size and limited knowledge—and recognizes only their mutual quality of consciousness. This process is called bhaga-tyaga-laksana, or applying a metaphorical meaning to a phrase by avoiding part of a word's literal meaning or some of its qualifications. Thus one can realize the true oneness between Brahman and jiva only when one puts aside the upadhi that limits Brahman into becoming a jiva. To help in this realization the guru instructs the disciple, "You are that." Since the sruti statements cannot be meaningless, Sankara contends, this is the only way to understand the maha-vakya.
Srila Jiva Gosvami answers this whole argument by pointing out that even when a jiva is absorbed in hearing the Vedic sound conveying the knowledge that he is one with Brahman, the upadhi covering the jiva, which is empirically real, will not magically dissolve. A man bound by chains will not become free just by meditating that his fetters are cut. A rabbit will not turn into an elephant just by meditating, "I am an elephant, I am an elephant." Such achievements would be possible only if the upadhis were merely apparent. An intoxicated office clerk may think he is the President of the United States, but when he becomes sober he understands he is still just an office clerk. If the upadhis covering Brahman are real, the task of removing them is not so easy. Mere knowledge is not sufficient to liberate the jiva from Maya. If knowledge alone were actually sufficient for liberation, why do the scriptures recommend various austerities, penances, and rituals for self-purification? The Mayavadis can only say that these are preliminary steps for purifying the heart, for qualifying one to understand the meaning of the srutis' maha-vakyas. But according to the sastras, knowledge (vidya) and ignorance (avidya) are both products of Maya. So even if a jiva, by studying Vedic texts, gets rid of his avidya with the help of vidya, he will still be bound by vidya. How will he do away with this other upadhi, vidya? Until he is free from all upadhis he cannot realize Brahman, which is beyond both vidya and avidya. Lord Krsna discusses this point with Uddhava in the Eleventh Canto of the Bhagavatam (11.11.3): vidyavidye mama tanu viddhy uddhava saririnam moksa-bandha-kari adye mayaya me vinirmite "O Uddhava, both knowledge and ignorance, being products of Maya, are expansions of My potency. Both knowledge and ignorance are beginningless, and they perpetually award living beings with liberation and bondage, respectively." Here the Lord explicitly states that vidya is also a product of Maya. When He says that vidya gives liberation, He does not mean that vidya alone can grant it, because no one can become free from Maya without surrendering to the Supreme Lord. He emphatically declares this to Arjuna in the Bhagavad-gita (7.14): daivi hy esa guna-mayi mama maya duratyaya mam eva ye prapadyante mayam etam taranti te "This divine energy of Mine—Maya, consisting of the three modes of material nature—is difficult to overcome. Only those who have surrendered unto Me can easily cross beyond it." The term vidya means "knowledge" and also "devotion." In Upanisadic statements such as tam eva viditva ati mrtyum eti, the word viditva ("after knowing") really means "by being devoted to Him, fully knowing His essence"; it does not mean having knowledge without devotion. Lord Krsna confirms this in the Bhagavad-gita (4.9): janma karma ca me divyam evam yo vetti tattvatah tyaktva deham punar janma naiti mam eti so 'rjuna "One who knows in truth the transcendental nature of My appearance and activities does not, upon leaving the body, take his birth again in this material world, but attains My eternal abode, O Arjuna." Here the same root, vid ("to know"), is being used, and in this con TEXT it means "knowing with devotion." Material knowledge is a feature of Maya, whereas transcendental knowledge about the Lord is manifested by the illuminating power of bhakti, an aspect of the Supreme Lord's internal potency. Spiritual knowledge is inseparable from bhakti. The process of hearing—or in other words receiving knowledge—is in fact listed first among the nine processes of devotional service. A passage from the Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad (4.4.21) bears out our conclusion that vidya indicates knowledge with devotion: vijïaya prajïam kurvita. "After knowing, one should practice wisdom." Here the word used for wisdom—prajïa—conveys the same meaning as vidya, and so the sentence indicates, "After knowing Him, one should practice devotion." Also, in the Bhagavad-gita (9.2) the Lord says, raja-vidya, "This is the king of knowledge." From the con TEXT it is evident that here vidya means "devotional service." Thus it is devotional service and not mere knowledge that cuts the bonds of Maya, as stated in Bhagavad-gita 7.14 and confirmed later, in Bhagavad-gita 11.53–54: naham vedair na tapasa na danena na cejyaya sakya evam-vidho drastum drstavan asi mam yatha bhaktya tv ananyaya sakya aham evam-vidho 'rjuna jïatum drastum ca tattvena pravestum ca parantapa "[Lord Krsna said to Arjuna:] 'The form you are seeing with your transcendental eyes cannot be understood simply by studying the Vedas, nor by undergoing serious penances, nor by charity, nor by worship. It is not by these means that one can see Me as I am. My dear Arjuna, only by undivided devotional service can I be understood as I am, standing before you, and can thus be seen directly. Only in this way can you enter into the mysteries of My understanding." If the Mayavadis respond by suggesting that it is possible for the jiva to remove all upadhis and become Brahman by the mercy of the all-powerful and benign Brahman, Srila Jiva Gosvami is glad to accept this idea, since it amounts to surrendering to the Vaisnava view. The Advaita monists insist that Brahman is devoid of all attributes and potencies, but if that same Brahman is now required to bless the jiva, then it has to have some potency, namely mercy. By allowing featureless Brahman to have any potency at all, the Mayavadis conform to the Vaisnava definition of Para-brahman as Bhagavan, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In that case, Srila Jiva Gosvami says, asmakam eva mata-sammatam, "Their view then agrees with ours." In the Bhagavat-sandarbha Srila Jiva Gosvami will prove that even for Brahman realization one must take shelter of the Supreme Lord. Next, Srila Jiva Gosvami exposes the fallacies of the second alternative, that Brahman's upadhis are unreal.

Conversely, if the upadhis are only apparently real, then Brahman's delimitation (pariccheda) and reflection (pratibimba) are also only apparently real, since these processes would not in fact occur. Because in this case the Mayavadis' doctrine would be based on the analogy of an unreal dream state, such analogies as that of the pot and the sky, which involve real upadhis, cannot serve to establish it. No proper analogy can be drawn between something that exists and something that does not exist. Therefore the Mayavadis' theories of division and reflection are nothing but the play of illusion, unprovable by their faulty application of analogies.

COMMENTARY Further Refutations of Pratibimba-vada and Pariccheda-vada In previous Texts, Srila Jiva Gosvami has shown that if Brahman's upadhis are empirically real one cannot satisfactorily explain the existence of either the jivas or the isvara. Now he will consider the Sankarites' second option, that Brahman's upadhis are only apparent. In this TEXT the upadhis are called avidyaka, or "illusory," a specific reference to pratibhasika reality as defined in Mayavada theory. In this con TEXT the Sankarites do not intend "illusory" to mean altogether nonexistent, for nonexistence can never give rise to either the jiva or the isvara. Rather, they say, Brahman's upadhis are "illusory" in the sense that they exist on neither the empirical nor the absolute level. They are an intangible, apparent reality, akin to dreams, misperceptions, and hallucinations. The objects one sees in dreams, misperceptions, or hallucinations are intangible. In a dream one may eat a big feast, for example, but upon waking up one will still feel hungry; the feast appears real only while dreaming. Similarly intangible are misperceived or imagined objects, such as a "snake" that is in fact a rope; fear of the snake will persist only as long as the misperception or hallucination continues. This kind of illusory reality (pratibhasika-satta) is inferior to the empirical world and to absolute reality. Nonetheless, the Mayavadis posit that such apparent upadhis can cause Brahman to take on the characteristics of jivas and the isvara. The first step in refuting this erroneous theory is to point out that an effect is always dependent on its cause and that specific effects arise from specific causes. For example, one cannot make water taste sweet by adding salt. It follows, therefore, that if the upadhis imposed on Brahman are only apparent realities they cannot produce empirical reality. A daydream may be a pleasant reverie, but no one gains any real benefit by imagining he has been crowned emperor of the world. Instead, as he whiles away the time the daydreamer may lose an opportunity for gaining some practical benefit in the real world. However much he dreams, his apparent reality will never become empirically real. In the con TEXT of discussing real upadhis, Srila Jiva Gosvami has already refuted the two analogies the Mayavadis use to explain pariccheda-vada and pratibimba-vada—the analogy of the sun reflecting in many waterpots and that of the sky becoming delimited by a pot. These analogies are also inappropriate here. The Mayavadis may justifiably presume the sky to be empirically real and thus delimitable by such an upadhi as a pot. But Brahman is neither empirical not divisible, and therefore it is impossible for empirical upadhis to delimit it. If any delimitation of Brahman can be reconciled with Brahman's transcendental nature, such delimitation can occur only on the level of mere appearance, not in empirical reality. Such a pratibhasika delimitation, unreal in the empirical sense, will not help explain how the jivas and the isvara come into being on the empirical plane. This leaves no consistent explanation of how indivisible, formless Brahman can be divided into the jivas and the isvara by either empirical or merely apparent upadhis. A good analogy must be as similar as possible to what it illustrates. The greater the similarity, the stronger the analogy. But the analogy of the sky and the pot is not similar enough to the situation the Mayavadis try to apply it to: while the sky and Brahman are similar, the sky's upadhi, the pot, is empirical, while Brahman's upadhis must be merely apparent. The impersonalists compare this world to a dream in order to show its illusory nature and to demonstrate that the world does not really exist. But it is unjustifiable to equate the dream world (apparent reality) with the external world (empirical reality) in order to reach this conclusion. If a person commits murder in a dream he is not punished for it, but in the phenomenal world he risks punishment for such an act. So it is improper to say that the world is just a dream. Sin and piety, which pollute or purify the heart of an actor, are not applicable to acts done in dreams; they give their bitter and sweet fruits only in the phenomenal world. The analogy of a dream, therefore, is not adequate for explaining the appearance of the material world from Brahman. The Vedic scriptures present the dream analogy only to illustrate the temporary nature of this world, with a view toward inspiring a sense of detachment from materialism in those desiring to walk the path of transcendence. The Mayavadis' only other alternative is to assign Brahman to empirical (vyavaharika) reality by placing it in the same class as the sky, to which the Vedas compare

it. But that leaves us with no absolute reality, in which case the whole idea becomes absurd because, logically, absolute reality must exist, and the Vedas and numerous saintly persons confirm this. Thus all these arguments fail to establish the doctrines of pariccheda and pratibimba, which are thus left as nothing more than mental exercises for impersonal speculators. They provide no sound explanation of how pure Brahman, by adulteration with upadhis, manifests as many, namely as isvara and the jivas. Srila Jiva Gosvami offers still more refutations of impersonalism in the next Text.

In this way, by basing their ideas on Brahman and avidya alone, the Mayavadis contradict themselves when they say that the one undivided Brahman, pure by virtue of being unadulterated consciousness and thus altogether free from contact with avidya, is nonetheless polluted by contacting avidya and thus becomes the jiva. Then again, say the Mayavadis, that same Brahman becomes the personal Godhead when He serves as the basis of Maya, the illusion concocted from the jiva's avidya. And under the influence of Maya, Brahman supposedly once more becomes the jiva. Here we have avidya within the pure spiritual being (Brahman), vidya within the upadhi called God, who is concocted by that avidya, and an illusory status of that same Godhead, who is the proprietor of vidya. We should carefully study how these and other similarly manufactured ideas are simply incoherent.

COMMENTARY Inconsistencies in Advaita Monism In the previous Texts Srila Jiva Gosvami has refuted the two main theories of Advaita monism, pariccheda-vada and pratibimba-vada. He showed that neither of these consistently explains the empirical world and the presence of the jivas and God within it. Now Srila Jiva Gosvami points out in further detail the fallacies in these theories. He argues that even if we accept either the pariccheda-vada or the pratibimba-vada as a description of how Brahman becomes divided into the many jivas, still the contradiction between Brahman's perfection and the superimposition of avidya will remain unresolved. How can Brahman, which is indivisible pure consciousness, have portions that fall under the rule of Maya and think themselves jivas? Knowledge and delusion cannot share the same location, just as light and darkness cannot both be present in exactly the same place. Being indivisible, Brahman cannot become fragmented to manifest the jivas. Moreover, the absolute existence cannot include Maya (avidya), but only Brahman alone. For Maya to be involved with Brahman, either Brahman would have to degrade itself to Maya's empirical level so it could be adulterated by upadhis, or else Maya would have to elevate herself to the absolute plane of Brahman so that she could influence it. The first of these alternatives is impossible because Brahman is without attributes and cannot change. The second alternative amounts to dualism, because then Maya and Brahman would have equal status on the plane of absolute reality. This, of course, contradicts the first principles of Advaita monism. Under the pressure of these arguments, the impersonalists may try to placate us with the claim that the vital issue at hand is not precisely how the jiva came under the influence of Maya but simply that he is now suffering in illusion. The house of material existence is now on fire; we do not have time to search out Maya's origin but should try to escape the fire quickly before it devours us, before we lose the opportunity of human life. Even if we grant this point, the Mayavadis still must convince us that the end they want us to seek, impersonal liberation, is in our best interest. This they cannot do. Our house may be on fire, but it does not follow that we should panic and jump out the first available window to our certain death. As Srila Jiva Gosvami indicates here, the Mayavadis say that after Brahman comes under the influence of avidya He is called jiva. Then this jiva creates Maya by his imagination. A portion of Brahman next gives shelter to Maya and becomes known as isvara, or the Supreme Lord. From that point on Maya follows isvara's dictates and controls the jiva, who is Brahman covered by Maya. So isvara is the basis of Maya, and the jiva is her visaya, or object of action. This is self-contradictory. This explanation is plagued with the logical fault called anyonyasraya-dosa, or "the defect of mutual dependence": Maya's existence supposedly originates from the jiva, and the jiva's existence also originates from Maya. This means that without Maya there is no jiva and without jiva there is no Maya. In addition, a part of Brahman supposedly becomes isvara by contacting Maya, but then Maya becomes subordinate to this isvara. In this view even God cannot come into existence without the involvement of the finite living beings, who are themselves dependent manifestations of Maya. So ultimately isvara is dependent on Maya for His existence. Another absurdity in the pariccheda-vada and pratibimba-vada presentations is the claim that Maya has two features—vidya and avidya. The upadhi delimiting Brahman as isvara is supposedly Maya's vidya portion, which is predominantly in the mode of goodness, while the upadhis limiting Brahman as the jivas constitute her avidya portion. In this way, isvara is the basis of the jivas' illusion despite His being the embodiment of perfect knowledge, but the Mayavadis cannot explain how such a division of Maya into vidya and avidya comes into existence. Certainly Brahman, being devoid of qualities, cannot create this division. Srila Jiva Gosvami advises us to study other inconsistencies like these in Mayavada philosophy. For example, we should consider the following questions: If originally only featureless Brahman and nothing else exists, where does avidya come from? Or, if avidya can bind Brahman, isn't it more powerful than Brahman? The Mayavadis compare Brahman to a spider that weaves its own web and somehow gets bound by it, but this analogy presents Brahman as possessing attributes and potencies, revealing a tacit acceptance of the Vaisnava dualistic understanding. We should also consider the following conundrums: (1) Since Brahman is unlimited and devoid of parts, it cannot possibly cast a reflection. (2) Brahman is described as pure awareness, but in order to function, awareness needs an object apart from itself. There is no meaning to knowledge without a known object. And when there is an object, there is the multiplicity of knower, knowledge, and known. (3) The very fact of Brahman's existence proves that it is potent, because anything that exists necessarily has some kind of energy or attribute. Thus there is duality between Brahman and its potencies or attributes. From Sankhya philosophy we understand that the primeval pradhana generates the mahat-tattva, which then gives rise to false ego. Now, suppose we grant that, as the Mayavadis say, a jiva can dissolve his false ego by cultivating spiritual knowledge. But even if one does this, the other two basic elements of material nature—mahat-tattva and pradhana—will remain undissolved. How will the egoless jiva transcend the mahat-tattva and pradhana to realize Brahman? Egolessness is not equivalent to liberation, since at the time of universal annihilation, when the conditioned jivas merge into the body of Maha-Visnu, they are devoid of false ego but still bound by their karma. An analysis of the word "Brahman" reveals still further problems for the Mayavadis. Every word has an inherent relationship with its meaning. According to Srila Jiva Gosvami in his Hari-namamrta-vyakarana (2.1), a word that refers to something denotes either an object, a quality, a class, or an activity. Certainly the word "Brahman" represents neither a class nor an activity. If Brahman were a quality, there would have to be another object possessing that quality, since no quality can exist without belonging to some object. If, as the last alternative, Brahman is an object, then it must possess qualities because an eternal object cannot exist without qualities. In either case, Brahman enters into a duality. Mayavadis explain this material world on the basis of Maya, which is neither sat (real) nor asat (unreal). They say that Maya is thus inexplicable (anirvacaniya). But in the Bhagavad-gita (2.16) Lord Sri Krsna recognizes only two categories, sat and asat: nasato vidyate bhavo nabhavo vidyate satah ubhayor api drsto 'ntas tv anayos tattva-darsibhih "Those who are seers of the truth have concluded that the unreal (asat) has no existence and that the real (sat) has no nonexistence." There is no mention here or in any other bona fide scripture of an inexplicable third mode. Thus there is no foundation for the Mayavadis' concept that Maya and the material world generated from her belong to some inexplicable third category. To prove their contention that the material world is inexplicable (anirvacaniya or mithya), neither real nor unreal, the Sankarites cite the well-known example of the rope and the snake. If snakes were completely nonexistent (asat), they say, no one would ever mistake a rope for one in semidarkness, because a nonexistent thing can never be perceived. So the "snake" is not nonexistent, but still it cannot be considered real (sat) either, because in sufficient light no snake will be seen. Thus there must be a third category, separate from both sat and asat. This third category is anirvacaniya, inexplicable, and to it the Sankarites assign Maya. The truth, however, is that one need not resort to the Mayavada philosophy to explain the rope mistaken for a snake. The snake and the rope are both real. A person who mistakes a rope for a snake must have previously experienced a real snake, and the conditions must be insufficient for correct perception. His experience of snakes, therefore, will cause his mind to superimpose the impression of a snake on the rope in semidarkness. By contrast, someone who has no experience of snakes will never mistake a rope for one. An infant, for example, will never mistake a rope for snake. Thus there is no inexplicable third category in material existence, as the Mayavadis claim. Since Mayavadis accept only Brahman as the ultimate reality, they say that even scriptures that teach such statements as tat tvam asi ("You are that") are true only empirically. Although such declarations have the power to uplift those who hear them, they are not absolutely true. In this way the Sankarites expose yet another inconsistency in their system. If the scriptures are only empirically real, how can they elevate anyone beyond Maya? By this logic even the enlightened writings of such liberated souls as Yajïavalkya and Sankara are unable to liberate their readers, for, not being absolute, they must be full of relative imperfections. In truth the jiva is not, as the Mayavadis say, merely an adulterated version of Brahman. As the Supreme Lord states in the Bhagavad-gita (15.7), mamaivamso jiva-loke jiva-bhutah sanatanah: "The jiva is My eternal fragment." Thus the jiva can never lose his identity by merging back into the Brahman it supposedly really is. When wheat berries and rice grains are mixed, they do not merge into one another and lose their separate identities. We can easily distinguish the wheat from the rice. If, however, we mix papaya seeds with some similar-looking black peppercorns, we may have difficulty distinguishing between them. Still, this does not mean they have lost their distinct identities. Similarly, the jivas cannot merge into Brahman and lose their identity. Of course, if a jiva wants to feel that he has merged with Brahman and performs the appropriate spiritual practices, the all-merciful Supreme Lord will help that jiva imagine he has attained literal oneness with Him. In reality, God and the jivas are always distinct, and both the Lord and His pure devotees are always aware of this distinction. Having established that the Mayavadis' philosophy is opposed to the truths revealed in Vyasadeva's meditative experience, and having highlighted some of the prominent defects in their logic, Srila Jiva Gosvami next argues that the monistic conclusion also contradicts the experience of Sukadeva Gosvami, the principal speaker of Srimad-Bhagavatam.

Furthermore, if the jivas' absolute oneness with Brahman were the actual purport of Srimad-Bhagavatam, Suta Gosvami would have said that Srila Vyasadeva saw in His trance how the one Brahman becomes divided because of ignorance, and how knowledge dispels the suffering caused by this duality. And if the Supreme Lord's pastimes and qualities were unreal, what Sri Sukadeva experienced in his heart would be invalidated.

COMMENTARY Srila Vyasadeva's Experience Does Not Support Advaita Monism Having presented his logical refutations of Advaita monism, Srila Jiva Gosvami now proceeds to disprove it by reference to sabda-pramana, scriptural evidence. This is the Vedic system. Logic by itself cannot give us an understanding of the Absolute Truth, the Personality of Godhead. In transcendental matters such as this, the final authority is always scripture. Scriptural evidence is so decisive that even if a certain claim defies logic but is supported by sabda-pramana, it should be accepted as conclusively true. Any standard of truth lower than this would be inconsistent with Vedantic epistemology, which is based on the axiom that the Vedas emanate from the Absolute and are thus infallible. Earlier, in the pramana portion of Sri Tattva-sandarbha, Srila Jiva Gosvami showed that Srimad-Bhagavatam is the supreme authority among all types of pramanas. Now he puts Advaita monism to Srimad-Bhagavatam's test. The essential message of the Bhagavatam is found in the verses narrating what Srila Vyasa saw in trance—the Supreme Personality of Godhead along with His internal potencies, His marginal potency (the jivas), and His external potency (Maya). Vyasa did not see a nondifferentiated Brahman being overpowered by Maya and turning into many jivas. Rather, He saw that the jivas are distinct from the Supreme Lord and are captivated by Maya because they think themselves independent of the Lord. Vyasadeva thus saw that the cause of the jivas' suffering is their sense of false independence. At the same time, He saw that the solution to the jivas' predicament is rendering devotional service to the Supreme Person (bhakti-yogam adhoksaje), not imagining a state of oneness with Him. In Suta Gosvami's prayers to Sukadeva Gosvami, his spiritual master, Suta confirms that merging with impersonal Brahman is an inferior goal. While speaking Srimad-Bhagavatam to the sages at Naimisaranya, Suta Gosvami specifically mentions that originally Sukadeva was absorbed in the bliss of Brahman. Later his heart was captivated when he heard a few Srimad-Bhagavatam verses describing the pastimes and attributes of Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Sukadeva was so entranced that he thoroughly studied the description of the Lord's pastimes in Srimad-Bhagavatam, and later he excelled in narrating the Bhagavatam. Therefore it is said that the Bhagavatam, which is the ripened fruit of the tree of Vedic literature, became even more relishable when it emanated from the mouth of Sukadeva. Suka means "parrot," and Sukadeva's name alludes to the well-known fact that fruits become sweeter after being pecked by parrots. When the fruit of the Bhagavatam was touched by Sukadeva Gosvami's lips and then tasted by Pariksit Maharaja, it became sweeter than ever. Srila Sukadeva Gosvami's attraction to the Bhagavatam indicates that the pastimes and attributes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are both real and completely transcendental; otherwise a liberated soul like Sukadeva, who was beyond all mundane desires, would have never taken an interest in them. Sukadeva Gosvami, the most eminent of all Brahman-realized transcendentalists, demonstrated by his own behavior the falsity of the idea of absolute oneness between the Lord and the jivas. Thus we can conclude that the keys to the Advaita doctrine of monism—namely, pariccheda-vada and pratibimba-vada—are supported neither by logic nor by the scriptures, especially not by the supreme scriptural pramana, Srimad-Bhagavatam. The Mayavadis derive their opinions only from word jugglery and the distortion of scriptural truths, with the result that the innocent who hear their explanations become confused. Next Srila Jiva Gosvami explains the purpose of the monistic statements found in the Vedic scriptures.

Therefore scriptural passages that appear to favor such doctrines as pariccheda-vada and pratibimba-vada must be understood in a secondary sense—that is, as expressing some sort of similarity between the Supreme's relation to the manifest world and the ordinary processes of division and reflection. The Vedanta-sutra confirms this idea: "The water in a pond covers the land underneath and thus delimits it from the rest of the earth, but Brahman cannot be delimited in this way to become a jiva" [V.s. 3.2.19]. "No, the reference to delimitation is appropriate not in its primary sense but in its secondary sense, that of the water delimiting larger and smaller areas of land. This interpretation fulfills the purpose of the scriptural passages, and thus it is appropriate to compare Brahman to land" [V.s. 3.2.20]. The first of these sutras gives an opponent's objection, and the second replies to that objection.

COMMENTARY The Meaning of Monistic Statements in the Vedas The Mayavadis accept the Vedas as the supreme authority and cite them profusely in support of their opinions. Indeed, many of the Vedic references they quote may seem to support their theories, but here Srila Jiva Gosvami explains how to correctly interpret the apparently monistic statements in the Vedas. In Sanskrit, words have two kinds of meanings—primary, called mukhya vrtti, and secondary, called gauni vrtti. Vedic philosophers say that by the will of the Supreme Lord each word has some particular potency, which creates a specific relationship between the word and its meaning. For example, the word "cow" has a potency by which it refers to a particular entity having four legs, a tail, two eyes, a dewlap, an udder, and other features. Sometimes, however, in a particular con TEXT a word's primary meaning fails to convey a relevant sense. In such cases we should conclude that the expression is figurative and accept some appropriate secondary meaning. Whenever the primary meaning of a scriptural statement is inappropriate there must be a secondary meaning intended, because scriptural statements, being apauruseya and thus free of defects, cannot be meaningless. In the Bhagavad-gita Lord Krsna addresses Arjuna as purusa-vyaghra, "tiger among men." In its primary sense the word "tiger" refers to a ferocious animal with claws and fangs. Arjuna was certainly not such an animal, but since Lord Krsna's words cannot be meaningless, the need arises for a figurative interpretation of purusa-vyaghra. Here the phrase is a metaphor, in which the Lord is calling Arjuna a tiger only to indicate his courage and prowess as a warrior. The word "tiger" in this phrase applies to these two characteristics that the tiger and Arjuna have in common, not to the primary sense of a tiger's shape, habits, and so forth. In the same way, Vedic texts that appear to support monistic ideas should not be abandoned as ambiguous babblings just because their primary meaning contradicts the conclusion of Srila Vyasa's trance. Rather, we should interpret these statements in a way consistent with the underlying purport of the Vedas. Accepting them literally will lead to confusion, and rejecting them outright may lead to contempt for the apauruseya-sabda. In the opinion of Srila Jiva Gosvami, one must search for secondary meanings that agree with Srila Vyasa's experience. To support this judgment, Srila Jiva Gosvami refers us to sutras 3.2.19 and 20 of the Vedanta. The Vedanta-sutra is divided into four chapters (adhyayas), each having four sections (padas). These are further divided into adhikaranas. Each adhikarana includes a topic statement from the Upanisads followed by a doubt concerning that statement, then an opponent's position (purva-paksa), then the right conclusion (siddhanta), and finally sangati, a demonstration of how the adhikarana relates to other adhikaranas. Some sutras are simply antitheses that represent the opinions of various sages and philosophers. These are always followed by siddhanta-sutras. Sutra 3.2.18 establishes that the purpose behind mentioning the jiva as a reflection of the Paramatma is not to show that the Paramatma becomes the jiva by reflection but to show that the Paramatma is different from the jiva in the same way that any real object is different from its reflection. If an object and its reflection were absolutely nondifferent, they could not be distinguished from each other. Thus the metaphor of the sun and its reflection in water is presented to establish not the oneness of the Paramatma and the jivatma but just the opposite. Sutra 3.2.18 states, ata eva copama suryakadi-vat: "Therefore, the analogy of the sun and its reflection shows the difference between the Supersoul and the soul." A doubt is then raised: "This very analogy proves that the Paramatma reflects in avidya and appears to become the jiva. What's wrong with this interpretation?" The next sutra (3.2.19) answers this doubt. It proves that the jiva is not a reflection of Brahman by pointing out that an upadhi cannot delimit Brahman in the same way that water can delimit land. While commenting on this sutra in his Govinda-bhasya, Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana explains that since Brahman is all-pervading, no object can possibly be distant from Him. Therefore, while the sun can cast a reflection in water because it is some distance from the water, Brahman can cast no reflection in anything because it is all-pervading. Therefore the jiva cannot be a reflection of Brahman. Although the claim of this sutra is valid, it does not agree with those scriptural statements that seem to indicate the jiva is a reflection of Brahman. It is in this sense that Srila Jiva Gosvami calls this sutra a purva-paksa. But if Brahman does not reflect as the jiva in the same way that the sun reflects on water, what do the sruti statements to that effect actually mean? They must have some reasonable purpose. Vyasadeva responds with the siddhanta, or conclusion, in sutra twenty. Although the comparison of the sun and its reflection with Brahman and the jiva is not valid when interpreted literally, it is valid when we consider the secondary characteristics of the analogy: The sun is great like Brahman, and its reflection is small like the jiva. Why do we give this secondary interpretation? To uphold the scripture's conclusions, which constitute the overarching, consistent message of the Vedas and their corollary literature. Other valid interpretations of this analogy are as follows: (1) The jivas' pains and pleasures do not affect Brahman, just as disturbances in a reflection of the sun do not affect the sun itself. (2) As a reflection of the sun is dependent on the sun, so the jivas are dependent on Brahman. (3) The jivas are localized like the sun's reflections, while Brahman extends everywhere as the sun does through its heat and light. If we were to similarly analyze the remaining Brahma-sutras, as well as the Vedas and Puranas, we would discover that all the scriptural statements indicating nondifference between God and the living entity, when understood in such a secondary sense, prove to be based not on absolute oneness but on some common attributes between the analogy and its subject, and thus they are faithful to the conclusion of the Vedas. The Vedic texts never propose complete oneness between Brahman and the jiva. Such a proposal would make the whole body of Vedic scripture self-contradictory; it would reduce the Vedas to babble, a waste of time for anyone wanting to study them for spiritual enlightenment. One may here raise the objection, "Instead of rejecting the primary sense of the monistic statements found in sastra, why not accept them and instead reinterpret those statements that teach dualism?" The answer is that the understanding derived from such an approach would contradict Sri Vyasa's experience, which is the nucleus of the Srimad-Bhagavatam, the topmost pramana. Next, Srila Jiva Gosvami explains the nondifference between the Supreme Lord and the jiva from the Vaisnava point of view.

Therefore the scriptural statements instructing us about the nondifference between the jivas and Brahman should be reconciled so as to agree with the conclusions Vyasa came to in His trance. This is accomplished by first removing the apparent contradiction in the jivas’ being both different and nondifferent from Brahman: From these statements teaching nondifference we should understand that the jivas are one with Brahman in the sense that both they and Brahman are pure spiritual entities, while by Brahman’s inconceivable, natural potency, which makes even the impossible possible, the jivas are also innately distinct from Brahman by virtue of their being His parts, like the infinitesimal rays of the sun’s light.

COMMENTARY Monistic Statements Need Interpretation Here Srila Jiva Gosvami gives his definitive opinion about the relation between the jivas and the Supreme Lord. Both the Lord and the jivas are naturally conscious beings, and it is primarily this common trait that the Vedic literature refers to when it speaks about their oneness. The purpose of these statements is to help us understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is beyond our experience. We know we are conscious, and so to give us some idea of His nature the Vedas employ various analogies and metaphors to illustrate that the Lord is conscious like us. In the course of these descriptions, we jivas are sometimes described as nondifferent from Him. Thus we should never misunderstand the Vedic statements about oneness to mean that the Lord and the jiva are one in all respects. When we read “He was a tiger in battle” we do not think that a man actually turned into a tiger. Rather, we accept a secondary meaning and understand that in battle the man was as ferocious as a tiger. We must accept similar secondary meanings for the statements in the Vedic literature about the jiva's and Brahman's oneness, our criterion always remaining whether our interpretation is consistent with the principles derived from Srila Vyasadeva's trance. Srila Jiva Gosvami is a follower of Srimad-Bhagavatam's acintya-bhedabheda philosophy, which he alludes to in the last sentence of this Text. Acintya-bhedabheda means "inconceivable, simultaneous oneness and difference" between the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the living entity, or in other words between the energetic source and its energy. The energy cannot exist without the energetic and is thus in one sense identical to it. At the same time, the energy can be said to be different from the energetic source because the energy's activities are perceived to be separate from the energetic. Logically, such a relation is ultimately inconceivable. The jivas are like atomic rays of light in relation to the sunlike Lord. As the Svetasvatara Upanisad (6.8) states, parasya saktir vividhaiva sruyate: "The Supreme Lord has manifold energies." Just as the rays of sunlight are neither completely different from nor exactly the same as the sun, so the jivas are simultaneously one with and different from the Lord. The Vedas' descriptions of nondifference refer to the qualitative oneness of the Lord and the jivas, and the Vedas' descriptions of difference refer to their quantitative difference. The Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad (2.1.20) provides an analogy to help us understand: yathagneh visphulinga vyuccaranti evam eva asmad atmanah sarve pranah sarve lokah sarve devah sarvani bhutani vyuccaranti. "Just as sparks emanate from a fire, so all these vital airs, planets, demigods, and living beings come from the Personality of Godhead." Sparks are obviously different from the fire that manifests them, but because they possess in minute quantity such fiery qualities as heat and light, they can be said to be "one with" the fire as well. In the same way, the jivas can be said to be simultaneously different from and one with the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Any apparent inconsistency in this relationship is resolved by the inconceivable creative energy of the Supreme Lord, which can make the impossible possible. One should not confuse this inconceivable nature of the Lord with the inexplicable (anirvacaniya) nature that the Mayavadis ascribe to Maya. They say that Maya is neither sat ("real") nor asat ("unreal") and is hence indescribable. Vaisnavas, however, do not say that the Lord and His energies are indescribable, for the scriptures describe both. Instead Vaisnavas say that because the Lord's nature and qualities are inconceivable to our limited mind and intellect, the Lord can be understood only through sabda-pramana. Some of the Lord's inconceivable features are mentioned in the Isopanisad (5): tad ejati tan naijati tad dure tad v antike tad antarasya sarvasya tad u sarvasyasya bahyatah "The Supreme Lord walks and does not walk. He is far away but He is very near as well. He is within everything, and yet He is outside of everything." Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana gives us another analogy that may help us understand acintya-bhedabheda-tattva: A fair-skinned brahmana boy and a dark-skinned brahmana boy are the same in terms of caste but are different as individuals. Similarly, the Supreme

Lord and the jiva are one in that they both possess consciousness, but they are different in that the Lord is the all-pervading, all-knowing, independent controller of Maya, whereas the jiva is localized and may be an ignorant, dependent slave of Maya. Sometimes the Vedas equate the jiva with Brahman because he is subservient to Brahman. The principle behind this idea is not unfamiliar. An ambassador, for example, is in one sense equal to the chief of state he represents, and because of this equivalence any respect or disrespect shown the ambassador redounds upon his master. The reason why people accept a rough equivalence between the two is that the ambassador has some of the master's power, but no one would ever foolishly consider them identical in all respects. The Mayavadis err by choosing to see just one side of the situation and emphasizing only the nondifference between the jiva and Brahman. One should not deal with the Vedas according to the logic of "ardha-kukkuti," accepting only statements favorable to one's viewpoint and rejecting opposing ones. The Vedas contain statements declaring both the difference and the nondifference between Brahman and the jiva. These seemingly contradictory views can most naturally be reconciled by the application of the acintya-bhedabheda philosophy. This doctrine of Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu's is the greatest gift of philosophy to the world. His teachings do not contradict any Vedic scripture or authentic point of view; rather, they resolve the apparent contradictions in the Vedic literature in accordance with the Vedas' final conclusions. His teachings are the natural and direct explanation of the Vedic literature. In summary, what follows are the ideas underlying the Vedic statements that speak of the oneness of Brahman and the jivas, employing the analogies of reflection and delimitation: 1. The jiva, like Brahman, is by nature purely conscious. 2. The jiva, like Brahman, is distinct from matter. 3. The jiva is one of Brahman's energies. 4. The jiva is eternally dependent on Brahman. 5. The jiva can never be absolutely one with Brahman. 6. The jiva is constitutionally the eternal servitor of Brahman. 7. The analogies of reflection and delimitation help us understand the purely spiritual nature of Brahman. In the Paramatma-sandarbha Srila Jiva Gosvami will further describe the living entity and his relationship with the Supreme Lord. In the next TEXT he summarizes the facts concerning abhidheya, the process for realizing this subject.

tad evam mayasrayatva-maya-mohitatvabhyam sthite dvayor bhede `daivi hy esa' ity-adi-nyayena tad-bhajanasyaivabhidheyatvam ayatam. Since the Supreme Lord and the jiva thus have distinct identities, the Lord being the foundation of Maya and the jiva being deluded by her, we can conclude that devotional service to the Lord is the only recommended method for self-realization. This conclusion follows logically from such scriptural statements as the following one in the Bhagavad-gita [7.14]: “This divine energy of Mine, consisting of the three modes of material nature, is difficult to overcome. Only those who have surrendered unto Me can easily cross beyond it.”

COMMENTARY Devotional Service Is the Abhidheya Srila Vyasadeva saw that the Supreme Lord is the foundation of Maya: mayam ca tad-apasrayam (Bhag. 1.7.4). He also saw that only the living entity is deluded by Maya: yaya sammohito jivah (Bhag. 1.7.5). Thus the Supreme Lord and the jiva are naturally distinct, for the Lord never comes under Maya’s spell. The Lord can never turn into a jiva, and no jiva can ever make himself God. Srila Vyasadeva also saw that the means for the jiva’s release from bondage is devotional service to the Supreme Lord: bhakti-yogam adhoksaje (Bhag. 1.7.6). In this TEXT the word eva in the phrase tad bhajanasya eva means “only” and indicates that no process other than bhakti-yoga can cut the bonds of Maya. No other method, not even jïana-yoga or astanga-yoga, is potent enough to permanently relieve the jivas’ miseries. As Lord Krsna declares in the Bhagavad-gita (7.14): daivi hy esa guna-mayi mama maya duratyaya/ mam eva ye prapadyante mayam etam taranti te. Maya, the divine energy of the Lord, cannot possibly be overcome by anyone except the person who surrenders unto Him. Other paths may at best elevate a person to the mode of goodness by purifying his heart of the lower modes, but they cannot elevate him to full transcendence without the merciful help of bhakti. Narada Muni confirms this in his teachings to Yudhisthira Maharaja (Bhag.

7.15.28–29): sad-varga-samyamaikantah sarva niyama-codanah tad-anta yadi no yogan avaheyuh sramavahah

yatha vartadayo hy artha yogasyartham na bibhrati anarthaya bhaveyuh sma purtam istam tathasatah “Ritualistic ceremonies, regulative principles, austerities, and the practice of yoga are all meant to control the senses and mind, but even after one is able to control the senses and mind, if he does not come to the point of meditation upon the Supreme Lord, all such activities are simply labor in frustration. As professional activities or business profits cannot help one in spiritual advancement but are a source of material entanglement, the Vedic ritualistic ceremonies cannot help anyone who is not a devotee of the Supreme Personality of Godhead.” In this TEXT the word bheda (“difference”) is also significant. By using it Srila Jiva Gosvami emphasizes that unless the jiva clearly understands he is both different from and subordinate to the Supreme Lord, he will not become interested in pursuing devotional service. This conviction is essential for advancement in spiritual life. The natural tendency of a conditioned soul is to think himself the controller, the lord of all he surveys, and this delusion makes him loathe the very idea of surrendering to the Lord. Indeed, this tendency to control remains a great peril even for those actively engaged in bhakti-yoga, since the jivas’ desires to control are very deep-rooted and can sprout forth at any time, choking off the tender creeper of devotion. Unless a candidate for unalloyed bhakti vigilantly guards against residual desires to be the master of all, these desires will likely manifest themselves and slow his progress toward pure Krsna consciousness. In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami concludes this part of his discussion with a reference to the prayojana, or final goal, of bhakti-yoga.

atah Sri-bhagavata eva sarva-hitopadestrtvat sarva-duhkha-haratvad rasminam surya-vat sarvesam parama-svarupatvat sarvadhika-guna-salitvat parama-prema-yogatvam iti prayojanam ca sthapitam. From the above discussion we can see that the Personality of Godhead is the most deserving recipient of perfect love because He instructs all people about their ultimate welfare, He removes all sorrows, He is everyone's Supreme Self (like the sun in relation to its rays), and He is perfectly endowed with all wonderful qualities. Thus is established the final goal of all endeavor (prayojana).

COMMENTARY Love of God Is the Goal of Life The Vedas provide education in religious practice (dharma), economic development (artha), regulated sense enjoyment (kama), and ultimately liberation from the cycle of birth and death (moksa). These four are known as the purusarthas, or goals of human life. On the basis of logic or scriptural authority, every school of Indian philosophy tries to direct the jivas toward liberation, which puts an end to all miseries. Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu's teachings, however, lead beyond liberation. When Sanatana Gosvami approached Sri Caitanya to inquire about spiritual life, his first question was "What is my duty after liberation?" This question was revolutionary. Before this, almost no one would inquire about a fifth purusartha; liberation was considered the ultimate goal. But Lord Caitanya explained to Sanatana that prema, love of God, is the fifth and ultimate goal of life (païcama-purusartha): prema pum-artho mahan. Lord Caitanya established this purusartha with reference to the Vedas, and in the course of doing so He relied especially on "the spotless Purana," Srimad-Bhagavatam, promoting it as the ultimate scriptural authority. Along with the final goal of pure love of God, Sri Caitanya also established that Lord Krsna is the most complete manifestation of God and therefore the most perfect object of loving devotional service. Prior to Lord Caitanya, Vaisnavas generally rendered reverential devotional service to the Supreme Lord in His opulent feature. Only a few rare souls knew the true conclusion of the Vedic teachings. Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu, however, revealed to all His followers the fifth goal—love of God—and ordered them to propagate it everywhere. If a person makes prema his ultimate goal in life, he will not detest the material world (as impersonalists do), because he will appreciate it as the creation of his beloved Lord. Following the example of Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, a devotee should see everything in this world in relation to the Supreme Lord and use whatever he can in His devotional service. One who adopts this correct outlook will quickly be endowed with all good qualities. The evil traits of lust, greed, envy, and so on will depart from him. Treating every living being as part and parcel of the Lord, he will become everyone's well-wishing friend and not think of harming or exploiting anyone, even in his dreams. With the followers of Lord Caitanya able to cultivate such an attitude, it is clear that His teachings are the most sublime, practical, and versatile of all spiritual philosophies. Although these teachings emphasize giving up this world and going to the spiritual world, following them also improves the quality of life here. Lord Caitanya's teachings are thus suitable for all people to study and practice, regardless of caste, creed, or nationality. By contrast, when a spiritual practitioner makes liberation his final objective, he will almost never develop a loving relationship with the Supreme Lord. Rather, he will attempt to use the Supreme Lord to achieve his goal. It is not uncommon to find liberationists who at first worship the Deity forms of Radha-Krsna and then discard these forms at a supposedly higher stage of development, when they imagine they have advanced to the level of Brahman realization. Such deluded souls think that because they have achieved oneness with the Supreme they no longer need the Deity forms. For the Mayavadis, then, the Lord is nothing more than a means to liberation, and thus their impersonalistic philosophy is the ultimate form of selfishness and blasphemy. Based on detachment and introversion, their doctrine cannot bring warmth and sympathy, compassion and serenity, into human society. It only depersonalizes human life. A pure devotee advancing on the path of loving devotional service is not inclined to demand anything of his Lord, not even liberation. He desires only to please his worshipable Lord eternally. To that end he cheerfully tolerates any tribulation. Such unconditional love is in fact the prayojana, or goal of life, promoted by Srimad-Bhagavatam. Although in the previous TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami said that a jiva should worship the Lord to get free from the clutches of Maya, here he goes further: he rejects liberation as the prayojana and hints at a new goal—love of Godhead, prema-bhakti. Sri Jiva will present his full discussion on prema-bhakti later, in Sri Priti-sandarbha. In this TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami gives four reasons why the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the most suitable object of love. The first reason is that the Supreme Lord is always thinking of every jiva's welfare. Therefore He frequently teaches the conditioned souls various ways to better themselves. He comes

Himself to give direct instruction, as He did when He taught Arjuna on the Battlefield of Kuruksetra and, as Veda-vyasa, compiled the Vedic literature. To preach His message He also sends His devotees to this material world as good-will ambassadors. Even on the material level the Supreme Lord takes care of all living beings by impartially supplying them with such essentials as light, air, water, and food. Even atheists and agnostics are provided for. The second reason why the Supreme Lord is the most worthy object of love is that He relieves the miseries of the conditioned souls by helping to liberate them from illusion. To take advantage of this help, however, the jivas must surrender to Him: sarva-dharman parityajya mam ekam saranam vraja aham tvam sarva-papebhyo moksayisyami ma sucah "[Lord Krsna said to Arjuna:] 'Abandon all varieties of religion and just surrender unto Me. I shall deliver you from all sinful reactions. Do not fear'" (Bg. 18.66). The third reason why Sri Krsna is the most lovable object is that He is the ultimate svarupa, or Self, of all beings, just as the sun globe is the ultimate basis of the sun's rays. The sun's rays always depend on the sun, and they are glorious only in relation to the sun. In the same way, the jivas perpetually depend on the Personality of Godhead and become glorious only when they reawaken their true relationship with Him through bhakti-yoga. Even material objects find peace only when they are united with their source: rivers all naturally seek the ocean and become finally calm when they reach that goal; similarly, an earthy object separated from the earth, such as an apple thrown into the air, will be spontaneously attracted to return to the earth. We also see that human beings naturally want to revere those they consider superior. Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, is the ultimate superior being, and therefore He is the ideal person in whom all jivas may repose their reverence and love. The last reason why Sri Krsna is the best object of love is that He possesses all wonderful, matchless qualities to their fullest extent. Of all the Supreme Lord's own direct manifestations, His original two-handed form as a cowherd boy is the most beautiful and attractive. Thus Srila Rupa Gosvami writes in his Bhakti-rasamrta-sindhu (1.2.59): siddhantatas tv abhede 'pi krsna-Srisa-svarupayoh rasenotkrsyate krsna-rupam esa rasa-sthitih "Although in principle there is no difference between the personalities of Lord Krsna and Lord Narayana, the husband of the goddess of fortune, still Sri Krsna's form is the unparalleled reservoir of rasas. This, indeed, is the law of rasas." Srila Vyasa saw this same Krsna in trance, along with all His personal attributes and potencies. He saw that love of Krsna is the ultimate goal of life: krsne parama-puruse bhaktih (Bhag. 1.7.7). Thus we can conclude by both logic and scriptural analysis that Lord Krsna is the supreme object of love. He is the actual prayojana, the ultimate goal of life. Next Srila Jiva Gosvami explains the importance of sadhana-bhakti, devotional service in practice.

In trance Srila Vyasadeva also perceived the process of self-realization (abhidheya), as described above [in TEXT 44]. Then, to propagate it He composed for the saintly Vaisnavas this scripture called Srimad-Bhagavatam. Sri Suta Gosvami describes all this in the verse beginning anartha- [Bhag. 1.7.6]. In this verse the word bhakti-yoga refers to sadhana-bhakti, regulated devotional service, which is characterized by hearing, chanting, and so on, and not to prema-bhakti, devotional service in pure love of God. This is the correct interpretation because sadhana-bhakti depends on instruction, while love of God depends only on the Lord's grace.

Even so, sadhana-bhakti, being the means for gaining the Lord's grace, ultimately matures into love of Godhead. Thus it is said that sadhana-bhakti directly removes the jiva's miseries (anarthopasamam saksad), without depending on anything else. As the Lord states in the Srimad-Bhagavatam [11.20.32–33], "Everything that can be achieved by fruitive activities, penance, knowledge, detachment, mystic yoga, charity, religious duties, and all other means of perfecting life is easily achieved by My devotee through loving service unto Me. If somehow or other My devotee desires promotion to heaven, liberation, or residence in My abode, he easily achieves such benedictions." By contrast, such methods as cultivating knowledge depend on devotional service for success, as shown instatements like the following [Bhag. 10.14.4]: "My dear Lord, devotional service unto You is the best path for self-realization. If someone gives up that path and engages in the cultivation of speculative knowledge, he will simply undergo a troublesome process and will not achieve his desired result. As a person who beats an empty husk of wheat cannot get grain, one who simply speculates cannot achieve self-realization. His only gain is trouble." Or else the meaning of anarthopasamam saksad is that sadhana-bhakti, without relying on any intermediate process, directly counteracts the material miseries but that only pure love of God, the mature fruit of sadhana-bhakti, can counteract the two fundamental faults of bewilderment and misidentification. Thus the abhidheya is expressed here [Bhag. 1.7.6] as it was before [Texts 29 and 32].

COMMENTARY The Definition of Abhidheya In TEXT 44 Jiva Gosvami concluded from his analysis of Srila Vyasa's trance that Srimad-Bhagavatam's abhidheya-tattva is devotional service to the Supreme Lord. Vyasadeva also saw in His trance that the miseries of the jivas can be vanquished by bhakti-yoga alone, and that this practice of bhakti-yoga will further lead to pure love of Godhead, which brings one direct realization of the Lord. To broadcast this knowledge He compiled the beautiful Bhagavatam and taught it to His son, Sukadeva Gosvami. The word bhakti-yoga is used twice in the Bhagavatam verses describing Srila Vyasadeva's trance. Srila Jiva Gosvami says that the first occurrence of this word (Bhag. 1.7.4) refers to spontaneous devotional service in full realization of prema, because only on that level of pure love can one have direct personal realization of the Supreme Lord. The second occurrence (Bhag. 1.7.6) refers to devotional service in practice, sadhana-bhakti. Unlike sadhana-bhakti, prema-bhakti does not depend on instruction because at that stage a devotee offers devotional service to the Lord spontaneously. Sadhana-bhakti must be learned from scripture and from saintly persons; it is motivated for the most part by scriptural injunctions. As the devotee performs the regulated practice of bhakti, his heart is gradually purified and he becomes fit for spontaneous devotional service in love of God. Only in this sense can it be said that sadhana-bhakti matures into prema-bhakti. But in fact prema, the internal potency of the Lord, manifests in the aspiring devotee's heart by the grace of the Lord and His pure devotee. In the Bhakti-rasamrta-sindhu Srila Rupa Gosvami states that devotional service which is executed by the senses and which matures into bhava-bhakti is called sadhana-bhakti. When bhava-bhakti intensifies it is called prema-bhakti. The only difference between the two is the degree of intensity: bhava-bhakti is the immature state of prema-bhakti. Bhava-bhakti is like the dawn, prema-bhakti like high noon. Thus Srila Rupa Gosvami defines prema-bhakti as follows: samyan-masrnita-svanto mamatvatisayankitah bhavah sa eva sandratma budhaih prema nigadyate "When bhava becomes very dense and the devotee's heart melts completely out of intense love for the Lord and great attachment to Him, that state of bhava is called prema by learned scholars" (Bhakti-rasamrta-sindhu 1.4.1). Because devotion belongs to the internal potency (svarupa-sakti) of the Supreme Lord, it is as potent as He is and can certainly fulfill all a devotee's desires. A pure devotee has no desire except to render the Lord service, but if somehow he does have some other desire, to fulfill it he need not take to any process other than bhakti. This is the supreme independence of pure devotional service. On the other hand, other progressive processes, such as jïana-yoga and astanga-yoga, depend on the grace of bhakti for success. Without the merciful glance of devotion, none of these processes can ever give their practitioners their own intended fruits, what to speak of love of God. Just as the body and the senses are worthless without the soul, so these paths are worthless without devotion. In Srimad-Bhagavatam, therefore, after Sukadeva Gosvami lists various demigods one may worship to fulfill material desires, he concludes: akamah sarva-kamo va moksa-kama udara-dhih tivrena bhakti-yogena yajeta purusam param "A person who has broader intelligence, whether he is full of material desires, without any material desires, or desiring only liberation, must by all means worship the supreme whole, the Personality of Godhead" (Bhag. 2.3.10). This statement reveals that bhakti-yoga is the key to fulfilling all desires, whether spiritual or mundane. Srila Rupa Gosvami confirms this in his Bhakti-rasamrta-sindhu (1.2.251): kintu jïana-virakty-adi-sadhyam bhaktyaiva sidhyati. "Indeed, only with the aid of bhakti can one attain the fruits available through the cultivation of knowledge, detachment, and so on." The knowledge and detachment mentioned here are not those related with the Lord and His devotional service. Indeed, the Bhagavatam verse quoted in this TEXT (10.14.4) makes it explicit that knowledge of impersonal Brahman is certainly among those items not related to the Lord and His devotional service. Srimad-Bhagavatam 1.7.6 states, anarthopasamam saksad bhakti-yogam: "Bhakti-yoga directly mitigates the miseries of the conditioned soul." Srila Jiva Gosvami gives two explanations of the word saksat ("direct") in this context. He says that bhakti in the first sense is sadhana-bhakti, which, unaided by any other process, directly removes all such worldly miseries as mental and physical disturbances caused by the dualities of heat and cold. However, to dispel the underlying delusion of bodily attachment we need bhakti in the second sense—namely, prema-bhakti, love of God, the fruit of sadhana-bhakti, In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami discusses the prayojana-tattva as Vyasadeva realized it.

Next, to clarify the final goal (prayojana), as described above [in Bhag. 1.7.4–6], and to affirm that the purna-purusa mentioned above [in Bhag. 1.7.4] is in fact Lord Krsna, Suta Gosvami speaks the verse beginning yasyam [Bhag. 1.7.7]. While describing the effect of hearing Srimad-Bhagavatam in this verse, he reveals another of Srila Vyasadeva's realizations. In this verse the word bhakti refers to pure love of Godhead, because that is the goal achieved through executing the devotional practice of hearing. The word utpadyate ("is generated") here means "becomes manifest." And the manifestation of pure love of Godhead is soka-moha-bhayapaha—that is, it destroys all lamentation, illusion, and fear, the implication being that even their subtle remnants are destroyed. This is confirmed by the words of Sri Rsabhadeva: "Therefore, until one has love for Lord Vasudeva, who is none other than Myself, he is certainly not delivered from having to accept a material body again and again" [Bhag. 5.5.6].

In this verse [Bhag. 1.7.7] the word parama-puruse ("for the Supreme Person") refers to the same purna-purusa ("complete person") mentioned earlier [Bhag. 1.7.4]. What is His form? To this Sri Suta Gosvami replies, "Krsna." In other words, for those whose hearts are enriched with thousands of scriptural statements such as krsnas tu bhagavan svayam ("Krsna is the original Personality of Godhead"; [Bhag. 1.3.28]), and for those who are attracted to His glories and fame by hearing through a bona fide disciplic succession, as soon as they hear His name their minds are filled with His presence. And as soon as such persons chant the first syllable of His name while uttering His mantra, the Lord's attention is also drawn to the chanter. That is the form denoted by the word Krsna in this verse [Bhag. 1.7.7]. This is confirmed by the author of Nama-kaumudi: "The conventional meanings of the name Krsna are 'one who is black like a tamala tree,' 'He who was breast-fed by Sri Yasoda,' and 'the Supreme Brahman.'"

COMMENTARY Devotional Service Frees One from All Material Miseries In TEXT 45 Srila Jiva Gosvami summarized Srila Vyasadeva's realizations concerning prayojana-tattva. Suta Gosvami reaffirms these realizations in Bhagavatam 1.7.7, where he states that just by listening to the Bhagavatam one will attain love of Godhead. Bhakti here must refer to love of Godhead and not sadhana-bhakti, devotional service in practice, since hearing Srimad-Bhagavatam is itself the sadhana. In this verse the verb utpadyate ("is generated") means not that love of God is created anew but that it becomes manifest in the heart. Because love of God is His internal potency, it is never created. As a concomitant effect of love of God, the devotee is freed from all lamentation, illusion, and fear. Indeed, even their dormant seeds are destroyed, so powerful is love of Krsna. The root cause of a jiva's misery is his forgetfulness of the Lord, but when he attains love of God He never forgets the Lord. One who attains love for Krsna loses interest in all kinds of other pleasures, including even the bliss of impersonal realization. All his doubts are vanquished and all his desires completely satisfied. Nothing can disturb him or deviate his mind from devotional service. In this regard Srila Rupa Gosvami writes (Bhakti-rasamrta-sindhu 1.2. 58): tatrapy ekantinam srestha govinda-hrta-manasah yesam Srisa-prasado 'pi mano hartum na saknuyat "Among the various kinds of unalloyed devotees of the Lord, the best are those whose hearts have been captivated by Lord Govinda. Indeed, such devotees have no attraction or desire even for the favor of Lord Narayana, the husband of the supreme goddess of fortune." A side benefit of such pure love for Krsna, as Srila Jiva Gosvami mentions in TEXT 47.1, is that even the seeds of lamentation, illusion, and fear are destroyed. These seeds are rooted deeply in the soil of bodily attachment, and by quoting Lord Rsabhadeva here Srila Jiva Gosvami emphasizes that there is no way to eradicate this bodily attachment other than by becoming attached to Krsna. And one can easily attain this prayojana of attachment to Krsna by hearing Srimad-Bhagavatam. Vyasadeva saw all this in His trance. Krsna, referred to in Bhagavatam 1.7.7 as parama-purusa, the Supreme Person, is identical with the purna-purusa whom Vyasa saw along with His potencies. In TEXT 30 Srila Jiva Gosvami has already explained that this purna-purusa is the original Personality of Godhead. Now he identifies that Supreme Person as Lord Sri Krsna. Srila Jiva Gosvami next explains who that Krsna is. History records various Krsnas. For example, Arjuna was also called Krsna, as shown in Bhagavatam 1.8.43, where Srimati Kuntidevi addresses Lord Krsna as Krsna-sakha, "the friend of Krsna [Arjuna]." And Vyasadeva was also sometimes called Krsna. Nonetheless, as soon as Vaisnavas coming in the authorized lines of disciplic succession hear the word "Krsna," the form that immediately comes to mind is Lord Krsna's, not Arjuna's or Vyasa's or that of any other ancient or modern person of the same name. According to Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana, this is the spontaneous experience of eminent personalities like Suta Gosvami, Saunaka Rsi, and Jayadeva Gosvami. Thus the normal, conventional meaning of the name Krsna is the two-handed Lord Krsna who appeared as a cowherd in Vraja. As we have described above, words may have various secondary meanings in addition to their primary ones. The primary meaning of a word is the image that comes to the mind upon first hearing or reading it, before any related thought or analysis can modify its meaning. Thus the primary meaning of the name "Krsna" is Lord Sri Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Sri Laksmidhara Pandita, while commenting on the meanings of various names of the Lord in his Nama-kaumudi, defines "Krsna" as "He who is black like the tamala tree." In Vaisnava literature Krsna's bodily hue is often likened to the color of the tamala tree, which is commonly found in the Vrndavana area. Just defining Krsna's complexion, however, leaves open the possibility that the Krsna referred to is the son of Devaki in Mathura and Dvaraka. Therefore Laksmidhara further specifies the meaning as "the one who was suckled by Srimati Yasoda." This fixes the primary meaning of "Krsna" as the young cowherd son of Yasoda in Vrndavana, since the older Krsna of Mathura does not drink Mother Yasoda's breast milk. If doubts still linger about this Krsna's being the Supreme Lord—since there could always be someone else named Krsna from Vrndavana who has a blackish complexion and a mother named Yasoda—Laksmidhara further limits the meaning of "Krsna" to "the Supreme Brahman," the Personality of Godhead. In Sanskrit, words have a derived meaning (yaugika), which may sometimes differ from their conventional usage (rudhi). The rudhi, or conventional meaning, is always the primary meaning. In cases where the primary, conventional meaning differs from the derived meaning, the primary meaning always takes precedence: yogad rudhir baliyasi. In the case of the name "Krsna," the derived meaning is also the Supreme Person, as the Mahabharata (Udyoga-parva 70.5) explains: krsir bhu-vacakam sabdo nas ca nirvrti-vacakah visnus tad-bhava-yogac ca krsno bhavati sasvatah "The syllable 'krs' denotes existence, and the syllable 'na' denotes bliss. The eternal Lord Krsna is also always Visnu in both these senses." The Amara-kosa Sanskrit dictionary (1.18) states, visnur narayanah krsno vaikuntho vistara-sravah: "The names Visnu, Narayana, Krsna, and Vaikuntha are synonymous." One may say that these are names of Visnu, but after listing thirty-nine such names, the Amara-kosa states, vasudevo 'sya janakah: "His father is Vasudeva." By way of further confirmation that Krsna is supreme, the author then immediately lists the names of Lord Balarama, Krsna's brother. Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana quotes the following verse in his COMMENTARY on Sri Visnu-sahasra-nama (20), while defining the name "Krsna": krsir bhu-vacakah sabdo nas ca nirvrti-samjïakah tayor aikyam param brahma krsna ity abhidhiyate "The syllable 'krs' means 'existence,' and the syllable 'na' means 'bliss.' The combination of these two is 'Krsna,' the name of the Supreme Personality of Godhead" (Gopala-tapani Up., Purva 1.1). In this way both the conventional and the derived meanings of the name "Krsna" are the same—the two-handed cowherd boy who is the son of Mother Yasoda and also the Supreme Godhead. Since Vyasadeva saw this particular Krsna in His trance, the ultimate goal of life must be to attain love of Krsna. The next point Srila Jiva Gosvami makes is that when the word Krsna is uttered in a mantra, as in the Hare Krsna maha-mantra, this sound attracts the attention of Lord Krsna Himself the very moment the first syllable is vibrated. This is so because the name "Krsna" is identical with the person Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. For verification we can examine the experience of many realized souls who attained perfection by chanting the Hare Krsna mantra. In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami explains that the bliss derived from love of Godhead is far superior to that derived from impersonal realization.

Srila Vyasadeva experienced that this final goal [the bliss of pure love of God] is superior to even brahmananda, the happiness derived from realizing the impersonal aspect of the Supreme. This we know because Vyasadeva taught Sukadeva Gosvami Srimad-Bhagavatam so he could taste the special bliss derived from love of Godhead, even though Sukadeva was already absorbed in brahmananda. Suta Gosvami states this in the verse beginning sa samhitam [Bhag. 1.7.8]. In this verse the phrase krtvanukramya ("after compiling and revising") indicates that Vyasadeva first wrote Srimad-Bhagavatam in an abbreviated form and that later on, after being instructed by Sri Narada Muni, He expanded and rearranged it. Thus two apparently contradictory statements are reconciled—one found here [in the Bhagavatam] saying that the Bhagavatam was composed after the Mahabharata, and the other found elsewhere [the Skanda Purana, Prabhasa-khanda 2.94], saying that the Mahabharata was compiled after the eighteen Puranas. The word nivrtti-nirata ("attached to renunciation") implies that because of his absorption in the bliss of Brahman, Sri Sukadeva was living a life of complete renunciation, from which he never deviated.

COMMENTARY Love of God Is Superior to the Bliss of Brahman One of Srila Vyasadeva's most profound realizations described in Srimad-Bhagavatam was that bhakty-ananda, the bliss derived from rendering loving devotional service to Krsna, is superior to brahmananda, the bliss derived from merging into the impersonal Brahman. Srila Rupa Gosvami confirms this superiority in his Bhakti-rasamrta-sindhu (1.1.38): brahmanando bhaved esa cet parardha-guni-krtah naiti bhakti-sukhambhodheh paramanu-tulam api "Even if the happiness of Brahman realization is multiplied trillions of times, it would not equal even a single drop of the ocean of the bliss derived from devotional service." Indeed, the bliss of pure devotional service always minimizes the happiness of Brahman realization. A father naturally wants to give His son the best thing he has. Thus Srila Vyasadeva taught Srimad-Bhagavatam to Sukadeva Gosvami. But being Vyasadeva's son was not Sukadeva's only qualification. Perfectly fixed in renunciation, he had no material desires (nivrtti-niratam). In other words, he had no ulterior motive that would have led him to misconstrue the meaning of Srimad-Bhagavatam for material gain, either gross or subtle. It is for this reason that Srila Vyasadeva regarded Sukadeva as the most qualified of His disciples to hear the Bhagavatam, and by choosing him for this great honor Vyasadeva set the standard for all future students and speakers of Srimad-Bhagavatam. In this TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami also resolves a controversy concerning the order in which the Srimad-Bhagavatam and the Mahabharata were composed. In the passage beginning with the following two verses, the Bhagavatam itself says it was composed after the Mahabharata: stri-sudra-dvija-bandhunam trayi na sruti-gocara karma-sreyasi mudhanam sreya evam bhaved iha iti bharatam akhyanam krpaya munina krtam evam pravrttasya sada bhutanam sreyasi dvijah sarvatmakenapi yada natusyad dhrdayam tatah "Out of compassion, the great sage thought it wise to do something that would enable even those who were ignorant of how to act for their own welfare to achieve the ultimate goal of life. Thus He compiled the great historical narration called the Mahabharata for women, laborers, and friends of the twice-born because they do not have access to the Vedas. O twice-born brahmanas, still His mind was not satisfied, although He engaged himself in working for the total welfare of all people" (Bhag. 1.4.25–26). When Vyasa was thus feeling dissatisfied, Narada Muni came and requested Him to compose Srimad-Bhagavatam. Elsewhere, however, it is stated that the Mahabharata was spoken after all eighteen Puranas. Sri Baladeva Vidyabhusana, in his COMMENTARY on this TEXT of the Tattva-sandarbha, cites the Matsya Purana (53.70): astadasa-puranani krtva satyavati-sutah cakre bharatam akhyanam vedarthair upabrmhitam "After compiling the eighteen Puranas, Vyasadeva, the son of Satyavati, composed the great history called the Mahabharata, which serves as a COMMENTARY on the Vedas." To resolve this apparent contradiction in the chronology, Srila Jiva Gosvami explains that Srila Vyasadeva originally composed the Bhagavatam in an abbreviated form. Later He compiled the great history called Mahabharata out of compassion for those who cannot study the Vedas. But even after completing this great epic, Vyasa still felt a void in His heart. Thereafter Narada Muni instructed Him to produce a new, expanded edition of Srimad-Bhagavatam, the one currently available. Moreover, from Srimad-Bhagavatam 1.3.43, quoted below, we can understand that this later edition was composed after Lord Krsna's disappearance from the earth. Earlier Vyasa had composed the Mahabharata for the welfare of people in the grip of Kali. Pariksit Maharaja's chastisement of Kali occurred after the dialogue between Narada Muni and Srila Vyasadeva, since it was the spread of Kali's influence that had saddened Vyasa. Prior to Kali's appearance Vyasadeva had no reason to feel dissatisfied, since Lord Krsna was still present along with all religious principles. The Bhagavatam (1.3.43) confirms that this later edition of Srimad-Bhagavatam manifested before the brahmana boy Srngi had cursed Maharaja Pariksit, an event that occurred after the disappearance of Lord Sri Krsna: krsne sva-dhamopagate dharma-jïanadibhih saha kalau nasta-drsam esa puranarko 'dhunoditah "This Bhagavata Purana is as brilliant as the sun, and it has arisen just after the departure of Lord Krsna to His own abode, accompanied by religion, knowledge, etc. Persons who have lost their vision due to the dense darkness of ignorance in the Age of Kali shall get light from this Purana." In this connection we can also refer to the statements of Suta Gosvami in the First Canto, Chapter Four. We can summarize the chronology of the Vedic literature in Kali-yuga as follows: First Srila Vyasadeva edited the one Veda, the original Yajur Veda, into four Vedas. He then abridged the one billion verses of the Puranas into eighteen Puranas consisting of a total of four hundred thousand verses. These included Srimad-Bhagavatam in its original, abbreviated form. Then Vyasa composed His epic work, Mahabharata, after which He distilled the essence of the Vedas, Puranas, and Mahabharata into the Vedanta-sutra. Finally He composed His most significant work of all, Srimad-Bhagavatam, which is Vyasadeva's own COMMENTARY on the Vedanta-sutra. Some traditional scholars believe there were two versions of the Mahabharata. They say it was first compiled soon after the Vedas in one hundred sections, and later Veda-vyasa reduced it to a hundred thousand verses in eighteen sections after compiling the eighteen Puranas. The Mahabharata's Adi-parva (10.5) states that Srila Vyasa compiled a samhita with six million verses, of which He gave one hundred thousand to human beings. This Mahabharata was first recited by the sage Vaisampayana to King Janamejaya, Pariksit's son. Another reference traditional scholars give to support their contention that there were two versions of the Mahabharata is the Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad verse cited in TEXT 12 (B.a. Up. 2.4.10) This verse lists the scriptures that the Supreme Lord breathed out, including the Itihasas, which are listed before the Puranas. Next Srila Jiva Gosvami shows that Srila Vyasadeva's realization in trance constitutes the epitome of all philosophies, as confirmed by Suta Gosvami.

In reply to a question posed by Sri Saunaka [Bhag. 1.7.9], Suta Gosvami speaks the verse beginning atmaramas ca [Bhag. 1.7.10], further explaining what Srila Vyasadeva experienced in trance and showing logically how it is consistent with the experience of all sages who take pleasure in the self. In this verse the word nirgranthah (“free from bondage”) means either “beyond the rules and regulations described in the scriptures” or “free from the knot of false ego.” The word ahaitukim (“causeless”) means “not desiring any results.” And to put an end to all doubts, Sri Suta says, “Indeed, the nature of Lord Hari is such that even atmaramas feel attracted to Him.”

In the next verse (beginning harer guna-; [Bhag. 1.7.11]), Suta reiterates this idea by relating Sukadeva Gosvami's experience. First, when Sukadeva Gosvami heard Srila Vyasadeva recite a few selected Bhagavatam verses describing Lord Hari's attributes, Sukadeva's attention was drawn away from the bliss of impersonal Brahman and his heart was captivated. Later Sukadeva studied the complete Bhagavatam, despite its vast size. And thereafter Lord Visnu's devotees became very dear to him, his affection for them growing as he daily discussed the Lord's pastimes with them. Or else the word visnu-jana-priya means that he became dear to them. The purport is as follows: The Brahma-vaivarta Purana relates how Sri Sukadeva, even while in the womb of his mother, realized that Lord Sri Krsna could completely dispel Maya's influence by virtue of His independence. Subsequently, on Sukadeva's request, Vyasadeva brought the Lord to His hermitage, and when Sukadeva saw Lord Krsna before him even as he lay within the womb, he became free from Maya's influence. Considering his life successful, Sukadeva at once departed alone. Thereafter Srila Vyasadeva, knowing that He could control Sukadeva only with Srimad-Bhagavatam, somehow made him hear some selected Bhagavatam verses describing Lord Krsna's superexcellent characteristics. In this way He captivated Sukadeva's heart, and later He taught him the entire narrative. Thus is declared the supreme glory of Srimad-Bhagavatam.

tad evam darsitam vaktuh Sri-sukasya Sri-veda-vyasasya ca samana-hrdayam. tasmad vaktur hrdayanurupam eva sarvatra tatparyam paryalocaniyam nanyatha. yad yat tad-anyatha paryalocanam tatra tatra kupatha-gamitaiveti nistankitam. Sri-sutah. From the above we can see that the speaker (Sukadeva Gosvami) and Srila Vyasadeva had the same realizations. And therefore we should always study the message of Srimad-Bhagavatam in the light of Sukadeva's realizations, not otherwise. By implication, we should consider any different interpretation merely speculative and thus deviant from the correct understanding. The verse under discussion [Bhag. 1.7.11] was spoken by Sri Suta Gosvami.

COMMENTARY Srimad-Bhagavatam Attracts Even Atmaramas To explain the essence of Srimad-Bhagavatam, in TEXT 29 Jiva Gosvami first analyzed the Bhagavatam's

description of Sukadeva's heart. Then he analyzed Srila Vyasadeva's experience in trance, on the basis of which Vyasa wrote Srimad-Bhagavatam. Jiva Gosvami concludes the discussion of the present TEXT by confirming the outcome of these analyses with the words of Sri Suta Gosvami in Srimad-Bhagavatam 1.7.10, the famous "atmarama verse." What follows is a list of the major points to be derived from his analysis: 1. The Personality of Godhead is endowed with multifarious potencies in three categories—internal, external, and marginal. 2. The chief and original form is Sri Krsna, but Krsna also manifests countless other expansions. 3. Neither the Supreme Lord's Supersoul manifestations nor the impersonal Brahman are independent of Him. 4. The finite living entities are different from the Supreme Lord in their personal identity; they can never be one with Him in an absolute sense. 5. Maya is the external energy of the Lord, deluding those living entities who turn their backs on Him. 6. Maya is a devotee of the Lord and is always subservient to Him. 7. Maya cannot influence the Lord and His internal potencies. 8. The jivas can become free from the bondage of Maya only by surrendering to the Lord and engaging in His devotional service. 9. Hearing the Srimad-Bhagavatam is devotional service to the Lord and can thus end the jiva's miseries. 10. The bliss one derives by engaging in devotional service to the Lord is so superior to the happiness derived from the realization of impersonal Brahman that even self-satisfied sages (atmaramas) become attracted to the Lord's attributes and pastimes. 11. The purpose of human life is to attain love of God, the mature fruit of devotional service in practice (sadhana-bhakti). 12. Devotional service is supremely independent, like the Personality of Godhead; it does not need the support of any other method of self-realization. When Suta Gosvami finished describing Srila Vyasadeva's trance, Saunaka Rsi asked him, "If Sukadeva Gosvami was completely renounced, having no interest in anything by virtue of being absorbed in the bliss of the self, what caused him to study this lengthy Bhagavata Purana?" Suta Gosvami replied with these two verses (Bhag. 1.7.10–11): "All different varieties of atmaramas (those who take pleasure in the atma, or spirit self), especially those established on the path of self-realization, though freed from all kinds of material bondage, desire to render unalloyed devotional service unto the Personality of Godhead. This means that the Lord possesses transcendental qualities and therefore can attract everyone, including liberated souls. The heart of the transcendentally powerful Sri Sukadeva Gosvami was captivated when he heard a description of Lord Hari's attributes and pastimes, and therefore he undertook the study of this great narration, Srimad-Bhagavatam. This made him very dear to the devotees of Lord Visnu." By this answer Suta Gosvami confirms all the realizations of Srila Vyasadeva and Sukadeva Gosvami. First Suta states a general principle, that many self-satisfied persons, although liberated from material bondage, are still eager to engage in Krsna consciousness. Then he mentions Sukadeva Gosvami as a specific instance of this principle's application. Thus Suta Gosvami establishes that Sukadeva Gosvami was not the only liberated person who became attracted to the Personality of Godhead's service. On the contrary, Sukadeva's experience is corroborated by that of many other atmaramas, demonstrating that the only reason why one would reject the bliss of Brahman realization and take up devotional service must be the wonderful, all-attractive attributes of Lord Hari. By this explanation Srila Jiva Gosvami shows conclusively that Sukadeva Gosvami, Srila Vyasadeva, and Suta Gosvami shared the same realizations. Therefore these realizations should form the basis of any genuine study and interpretation of Srimad-Bhagavatam. Interpretations based on something else must be considered deviant from the scripture's intended meaning. In TEXT 27 Srila Jiva Gosvami disclosed that Sridhara Svami inserted some impersonalistic ideas into his COMMENTARY on Srimad-Bhagavatam. Sridhara Svami did this as a preaching strategy to attract the Mayavadis to the Bhagavata philosophy. Jiva Gosvami said there that in such instances he would give his own explanations. A recent scholar has criticized Srila Jiva Gosvami for this policy, labeling him an opportunist who accepted only those statements that supported his opinion and belittled others by declaring that they were made with ulterior motives and did not actually express Sridhara Svami's opinions. This scholar suggests that Jiva Gosvami is not a true follower of Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, who highly revered Sridhara Svami's Bhavartha-dipika. But in this TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami further clarifies his policy: He accepts any explanation that complements the realization of Srila Vyasadeva, Sukadeva Gosvami, and Suta Gosvami—namely that pure devotional service to Lord Krsna is the ultimate goal of life. That this policy reflects the real desire of Lord Caitanya will be recognized by everyone who knows that Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu was the leading opponent of impersonalism in His time. In debate He defeated two of the leading Mayavadis of His time, Prakasananda Sarasvati and Vasudeva Sarvabhauma, and He frequently condemned the Mayavada interpretation of the Vedanta-sutra. In light of His teachings and example, for Him to embrace a Mayavadi COMMENTARY on Srimad-Bhagavatam is unlikely and not at all credible. Vaisnavas coming in disciplic succession do not have the slightest confusion on this point. Lord Caitanya revered Sridhara Svami's COMMENTARY for two reasons: first, because Sridhara was in fact a great Vaisnava, and second, because his COMMENTARY kept the natural sense of the Bhagavatam and with its conclusions supported the Vaisnava siddhanta. Therefore it should be obvious to anyone who reads his COMMENTARY that whatever impersonal explanations Sridhara Svami gave did not express his true heart. For example, while commenting on the first verse of the Bhagavatam he states, Srimad-bhagavad-guna-anuvarnana-pradhanam bhagavata-sastram:

"Srimad-Bhagavatam was written chiefly to provide descriptions of the Supreme Lord's qualities." In the next verse, while commenting on the word vastavam, he writes, vastava-sabdena vastuno 'mso jivah, vastunah saktir maya ca, vastunah karyam jagat, tat sarvam vastv eva: “The word vastava indicates that the jiva is part of the Absolute, that Maya is the energy of the Absolute, and that the material world is the creation of the Absolute. All this is real.” This and many similar statements throughout Sridhara Svami’s Bhagavatam COMMENTARY make foolish any doubt about his status as a pure Vaisnava. And it is equally foolish to criticize Srila Jiva Gosvami for not using the impersonalistic portions of Sridhara’s COMMENTARY here in his Sat-sandarbha. One can fathom the true essence of Srimad-Bhagavatam only from the viewpoint of Sri Vyasa and Sukadeva Gosvami. Because Srila Jiva Gosvami held this opinion, he is a true scholar of the Bhagavatam and a true follower of Sri Caitanya, who desired to see the Bhagavatam established as the final word in philosophy throughout the world. Jiva Gosvami was neither a blind follower of Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu nor a blind scholar foolishly trying to understand the supreme scripture without accepting the standard authorities in disciplic succession. Jiva Gosvami was the leading disciple of Srila Rupa Gosvami and Srila Sanatana Gosvami, two principal followers of Sri Caitanyadeva. The Lord personally instructed them in the science of devotional service and ordered them to write books setting forth His precepts. This they did in a most wonderful way, explaining the intricacies of bhakti-yoga so that no follower in their line would have to speculate or misinterpret the teachings of Lord Caitanya. Rupa and Sanatana personally trained Srila Jiva Gosvami in Krsna consciousness. They were so pleased with him that they made him the editor of many of their books. We have no reason, therefore, to doubt that Srila Jiva Gosvami loyally followed in the footsteps of Srila Rupa and Sanatana Gosvamis and therefore of Lord Caitanya. The ultimate proof of this is that one can find no contradictions between the writings of Rupa and Sanatana and those of Jiva Gosvami. Indeed, earlier in Sri Tattva-sandarbha Jiva Gosvami declared that he was writing this work under their order. Moreover, he succeeded Srila Rupa and Sanatana Gosvamis as leader of the Gaudiya Vaisnavas in Vrndavana, Bengal, and Orissa. This universal recognition of his leadership was explicit acknowledgment of his stature as a dedicated follower of Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu. We learn from Srimad-Bhagavatam (1.2.2) that Sukadeva Gosvami left his father’s house immediately after his birth. According to the Brahma-vaivarta Purana, when Sukadeva was still in his mother’s womb he could understand the peril of living in the material world, the risk of being captivated by Maya. He also knew that Krsna can counter Maya’s charms, and therefore he forced his father, Vyasadeva, to bring Lord Krsna from Dvaraka. Sukadeva then made the Lord Himself promise to protect him from Maya. Only then did Sukadeva agree to take birth, and even so he immediately left home to enter the forest. Out of natural affection for His son, Srila Vyasadeva followed him, calling him to come back. But Sukadeva was completely unattached to material life and paid his father no heed. Vyasadeva was deeply disappointed, since He wanted to teach Sukadeva Srimad-Bhagavatam. To entice him to return home, Vyasa had some of His disciples recite verses from the Bhagavatam whenever they went to the forest to collect firewood. Once when they were singing these verses, Sukadeva Gosvami heard them. At once his heart was captivated, and he followed the students back to Sri Vyasa. Then Sukadeva, who had already put aside his attachment to the impersonal Brahman, learned the complete Srimad-Bhagavatam from Srila Vyasadeva. At present there is no scriptural reference indicating which verses Sri Sukadeva heard that captivated him, but some Vaisnava scholars state that they included the following three: yam manyase matuleyam priyam mitram suhrt-tamam akaroh sacivam dutam sauhrdad atha sarathim “O King, that personality whom, out of ignorance only, you thought to be your maternal cousin, your very dear friend, well-wisher, counselor, messenger, benefactor, etc., is that very Personality of Godhead, Sri Krsna” (Bhag. 1.9.20). @vpl1 = aho baki yam stana-kala-kutam @vpl2 = jighamsayapayayad apy asadhvi @vpl1 = lebhe gatim dhatry-ucitam tato ’nyam @vpl2 = kam va dayalum saranam vrajema “Alas, how shall I take shelter of one more merciful than He [Krsna], who granted the position of mother to the she-demon Putana although she was unfaithful and she prepared deadly poison to be sucked from her breast?” (Bhag. 3.2.23) @vpl1 = barhapidam nata-vara-vapuh karnayoh karnikaram @vpl2 = bibhrad vasah kanaka-kapisam vaijayantim ca malam @vpl1 = randhran venor adhara-sudhayapurayan gopa-vrndair @vpl2 = vrndaranyam sva-pada-ramanam pravisad gita-kirtih “Wearing a peacock-feather ornament upon His head, blue karnikara flowers on His ears, a yellow garment as brilliant as gold, and a Vaijayanti garland, Lord Krsna exhibited His transcendental form as the greatest of dancers as He entered the forest of Vrndavana, beautifying it with the marks of His footprints. He filled the holes of His flute with the nectar of His lips, and the cowherd boys sang His glories” (Bhag. 10.21.5). These verses describe Lord Krsna’s love for His devotees, His mercy even toward His enemies, and His incomparable charm and beauty. The history of Sukadeva Gosvami described in the Mahabharata differs from that narrated above. Baladeva Vidyabhusana explains that the two accounts describe events from different days of Lord Brahma. Having ascertained the prameya of Srimad-Bhagavatam—that is, what one should learn from it—Srila Jiva Gosvami next says something about the format of Sri Sat-sandarbha.

Sri-veda-vyasah. Hereafter, to delineate systematically and thoroughly the message of Srimad-Bhagavatam, we shall explain in these six Sandarbhas the principles of sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana, one after the other. This first book, Tattva-sandarbha, discusses the connection between the subject being described and the TEXT describing it. This connection is mentioned in general terms [in Bhagavatam 1.1.2] with the words vedyam vastavam atra vastu: “Here the real reality is to be known.” Commenting on this part of the verse, Srila Sridhara Svami writes, “Here in this beautiful Bhagavatam the ultimate reality in its highest manifestation is to be known, not reality in terms merely of substance, qualities, and so on, as taught by the Vaisesikas and others.” This verse [Bhag. 1.1.2] is spoken by Sri Veda-vyasa.

COMMENTARY The Subject of the Sat-sandarbha Here Srila Jiva Gosvami informs us that in the six Sandarbhas he will explain in great detail the same sambandha-, abhidheya-, and prayojana-tattvas that Sri Vyasadeva and Sukadeva Gosvami realized. He briefly mentioned them in Texts 8 and 9, and now he will elaborate on them on the basis of Srimad-Bhagavatam. The Tattva-, Bhagavat-, Paramatma-, and Krsna-sandarbhas treat the sambanda-tattva. The Bhakti-sandarbha discusses the abhidheya-tattva, the Priti-sandarbha the prayojana-tattva. The Tattva-sandarbha introduces the subject matter of the six Sandarbhas by establishing the authority of Srimad-Bhagavatam and saying something about its origin and content. As mentioned earlier, the relationship of a subject with its description is technically called the vacya-vacakata-sambandha. The subject of Srimad-Bhagavatam is revealed in its very second verse: vedyam vastavam atra vastu. “The absolute reality is made understandable herein.” As we have already discussed, reality manifests on various levels, but Srimad-Bhagavatam enlightens us about the ultimate reality, Sri Krsna, who encompasses and reconciles all other realities. In contrast to Srila Vyasadeva’s presentation in the Bhagavatam, the philosophies formulated by other ancient sages, such as Gautama and Kanada, incompletely describe reality. Gautama, in his system of Nyaya philosophy, says that by understanding the empirical means and objects of knowledge one can free oneself from material miseries. And Kanada, in his system of Vaisesika philosophy, which was briefly alluded to at the end of this Text, recognizes seven categories of existence: dravya (substances), guna (qualities), karma (motions), samanya (general categories), visesa (particularities), samavaya (inherence), and abhava (nonexistence). With these seven categories the Vaisesikas try to explain all of reality. But although the scientific study embodied in philosophies like Nyaya and Vaisesika may lead to realization of reality on some level, this is far different from realization of the Absolute Reality, which Srimad-Bhagavatam makes available. Srila Jiva Gosvami explains the nature of this reality in the next Text.

Sri-sutah. “What is the nature of this Absolute Reality?” Suta Gosvami answ ers [Bhag. 1.2.11]: “The knowers of that Absolute Reality call it nondual consciousness.” Here the word jïana refers to that entity whose nature is exclusively pure consciousness. This pure spirit is called nondual for the following reasons: (1) there is nothing else, either similar or dissimilar, that is self-existent; (2) it takes support only from its own potencies; and (3) these potencies can have no existence without it as their absolute foundation. The term tattva here implies the idea of the supreme goal of human life. Thus we understand that this tattva, or Absolute Reality, is the embodiment of the highest bliss and is therefore also eternal. The verse under discussion was spoken by Sri Suta Gosvami.

COMMENTARY The Absolute Reality Is Nondual Consciousness In the last TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami stated that the Absolute Reality is to be known from Srimad-Bhagavatam. This naturally raises the question, “What is the essential nature of this Absolute Reality?” In reply Jiva Gosvami quotes Srimad-Bhagavatam’s statement that the Absolute Reality is nondual (advayam), or in other words one without a second. There cannot be more than one Absolute Reality, because if a second one were to be found the first one would immediately cease to be absolute. That the Absolute Reality is nondual, however, does not mean that nothing else exists. Rather, the word “nondual” indicates two further things (in addition to the meaning stated above): first, the Absolute Reality is self-existent, meaning that it is grounded in itself and depends on no external support; second, nothing else can exist independent of this nondual reality’s support. In Vedic philosophy, an object is considered nondual if it is free of three kinds of differences—those among objects of the same class, those among objects of different classes, and those between an object and its parts. A difference between objects of the same class is called sajatiya-bheda. Even though two chairs may look the same, function the same, and belong to the class called “chair,” they still differ as individual chairs. A change in one will not directly affect the other. A difference between objects of different classes is called vijatiya-bheda. For example, in its appearance and function a chair is different from a table. Finally, a difference between an object and its parts is called sva-gata-bheda. For example, if all the parts of a chair are scattered, the chair will no longer exist. In this way the chair is not self-existent. These three kinds of differences give rise to the duality we observe throughout material nature. They do not exist, however, on the absolute plane; thus Suta Gosvami calls the pure consciousness (Absolute Reality) jïanam advayam, nondual consciousness. Even when the Supreme Personality of Godhead expands into forms such as Ramacandra and Balarama, these svamsa (selfsame) expansions remain nondifferent from the Lord's original self. Still, while He is not dependent on Them, They are dependent on Him. Since the Lord and His svamsa expansions belong to the same class, no difference of the sajatiya-bheda type is found in Him. Material nature, being inert, belongs to a class of existence different from that of the transcendental Personality of Godhead. This might lead one to conclude that there is vijatiya-bheda between Him and material nature. Nevertheless, since material nature's existence is not independent or separate from Him, there is ultimately no difference of vijatiya-bheda between Him and His material expansions. Finally, the Lord's body and its limbs are each fully conscious and potent and therefore nondifferent from Him Himself. For this reason it is said that in Lord Krsna there exists no difference of the svagata-bheda type. The finite living entities belong to the marginal potency of the Supreme Lord. Thus one may view them in two ways, both as belonging to the same class as the Lord because they are conscious like Him, and as belonging to a different class because their size and potency is very small. From both viewpoints the jivas are fully dependent on the Supreme Lord, so that there exist none of the three types of differences between them and the Lord. Srila Jiva Gosvami concludes, therefore, that although the Lord's energies render Him service in various ways, they have no existence separate from Him (tam vina tasam asiddhatvat). Just as a spider weaves a web with a special substance it produces and then makes the web its home, so Sri Krsna, the personified nondual Absolute Reality, employs His own energies to manifest the spiritual realm, where He resides. These energies are part of His internal nature and have no independent existence. In the verse under discussion (Bhag. 1.2.11), the word jïanam means "consciousness." Its significance here is that the nondual reality is consciousness and also conscious, just as the sun is light and also luminous. Because the word jïanam refers to the Absolute Reality, this nondual consciousness must have perpetual existence (sat) as a characteristic. And because the word tattvam indicates the supreme objective of life, it follows that this nondual reality must also be characterized by bliss (ananda), since all living beings seek pleasure, whether they know it or not. Indeed, direct perception, logical analysis, and scriptural authority all confirm that the pursuit of happiness is the ultimate motivation in all activities. This is the basic purpose underlying creative and destructive processes and all personal relationships. As the Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad (2.4.5) states, na va are patyuh kamaya patih priyo bhavaty atmanas tu kamaya patih priyo bhavati: “My dear, the husband is not loved for his own sake, but for the sake of the self.” Here the word “self” refers to either the jiva or the Supreme Lord. In our conditioned state, the self we perceive is our own self, the jiva. We become attached to someone or something because we derive happiness from loving that person or thing. This feeling of happiness comes from our sense of possession—the notion that the object of love is “ours”—not from the person or the object itself. The truth of this principle is shown by the common experience that our happiness naturally decreases when our sense of possession diminishes. By contrast, in the liberated state we realize that our ultimate Self is the Supreme Lord. When we act solely on the basis of this understanding we become the Lord’s pure devotees, and then we render service only for His pleasure and desire nothing in return. Even if the all-attractive Lord treats us roughly we are still happy, for we have abandoned all fears and cares in our loving relationship with Him. Lord Caitanya demonstrated this standard in His Siksastaka, where He prayed: @vpl1 = aslisya va pada-ratam pinastu mam @vpl2 = adarsanan marma-hatam karotu va @vpl1 = yatha tatha va vidadhatu lampato @vpl2 = mat-prana-nathas tu sa eva naparah “I know no one but Krsna as my Lord, and He shall remain so even if He handles me roughly in His embrace or makes me broken-hearted by not being present before me. He is completely free to do anything and everything, for He is always my worshipful Lord, unconditionally.” In conditioned life we do not know that Krsna is the supreme object of love and the source of all bliss. Rather, we mistake ourselves for the source of bliss. To enlighten us about Himself, Krsna instructs us in the Bhagavad-gita (10.8–9): aham sarvasya prabhavo mattah sarvam pravartate iti matva bhajante mam budha bhava-samanvitah mac-citta mad-gata-prana bodhayantah parasparam kathayantas ca mam nityam tusyanti ca ramanti ca “I am the source of all spiritual and material worlds. Everything emanates from Me. The wise who perfectly know this engage in My devotional service and worship Me with all their hearts. The thoughts of My pure devotees dwell in Me, their lives are fully devoted to My service, and they derive great satisfaction and bliss from always enlightening one another and conversing about Me.” Thus there is an inherent relationship between jïana (knowledge), satya (eternal existence), and ananda (bliss). This relationship is clearly indicated in such sruti statements as vijïanam anandam brahma: “Brahman is pure consciousness and bliss” (Brhad-aranayaka Up. 3.9.34). Thus the nature of the nondual consciousness described in this verse has been designated sac-cid-ananda, “permanent existence, knowledge, and bliss.” In this TEXT Jiva Gosvami presented his thesis, that jïana is eternal. In the next TEXT he will explain the purva-paksa, that jïana is momentary.

One may question, But events of consciousness are seen to exist only briefly, taking the shape, say, of a blue object one moment and a yellow object the next. How then can consciousness be called the nondual and eternal theme of this scripture [Srimad-Bhagavatam]? Suta Gosvami replies: "This Bhagavatam is the essence of all Vedanta philosophy because its subject matter is the Absolute Truth, which, while nondifferent from the spirit soul, is the ultimate reality, one without a second. The goal of this literature is exclusive devotional service unto that Supreme Truth" [Bhag. 12.13.12]. The sruti has defined the nature of this Absolute Truth (Brahman): "The Supreme Brahman is infinite truth and knowledge" [Taittiriya Up. 2.1.1]. That Brahman is the sole cause of the entire creation is shown by such sruti statements as "By hearing about which [Brahman] everything is heard" [Chandogya Up. 6.1.3], "By knowing which [Brahman] everything is known," and "My boy, in the beginning there was only sat, the eternal reality" [Chandogya Up. 6.2.1]. That the Supreme Brahman achieves everything simply by His desire is shown by the statement "He glanced and desired, Let Me become many'" [Chandogya Up. 6.2.3]. In the statement "Along with this individual living entity I shall manifest name and form" [Chandogya Up. 6.3.2], the living entity (jiva) is mentioned in connection with and as belonging to the Supreme, which is called Brahman because it is greater than all else in essence and potencies; here the pronoun idam ("this") differentiates the jiva from Brahman, but the word atmana ("self") indicates that the jiva is part and parcel of Brahman. According to what was revealed in Srila Vyasadeva's trance, the living entity is one with the Supreme Brahman in the sense of not being completely different from Him. Such sruti statements as tat tvam asi ("You are that"; [Chandogya Up. 6.8.7]) reveal that the oneness of the Supreme Brahman with the jiva consists of their both being purely spiritual by virtue of the jiva's status as a particle of the Supreme Brahman. Understanding this idea helps one acquire preliminary knowledge of the Supreme Brahman. The entity thus designated as the Supreme Brahman, who is the essence of all the Upanisads and is one without a second, is the focus of interest, the exclusive subject matter, of this Srimad-Bhagavatam. Here we understand "this Srimad-Bhagavatam" to be implied by the syntactic connection with that same phrase in one of the preceding verses [12.13.9].

The following analogy helps clarify the above idea. Suppose a person has been kept in a dark room from birth and has never seen the sun. When he wants to know what the sun is, someone points to a ray of sunlight passing through a window grating and says, "That is the sun. Try to understand that the sun is a great orb of light, of the same substance as this ray, which is a portion of it." In the Paramatma-sandarbha we will establish that the jiva is similarly a fractional portion of the Supreme Brahman, manifested by one of His inconceivable potencies.

Sri-sutah. Thus when the Upanisads say that the Supreme Brahman has parts, they mean that one of His characteristics is to be endowed with the part-and-parcel living beings and other energies. Conversely, when the srutis speak of Him as having no parts, they are focusing on His exclusive essence. In the fourth line [of Bhagavatam 12.13.12], namely kaivalyaika-prayojanam, the word kaivalya ("oneness") simply means "purity." Later, in the Priti-sandarbha, we will demonstrate that this purity is none other than pure devotional service. The verse under discussion [Bhag. 12.13.12] was spoken by Sri Suta Gosvami.

COMMENTARY The Meaning of Monistic Statements In the last TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami established that the Absolute Truth is eternal, nondual consciousness. One sect of Buddhists, the Ksanika-vijïana-vadis, raise an objection to this conclusion. Their doctrine states that there is only one reality, consciousness, which is changing at every moment, and that there is no difference between knowledge and the object of knowledge. Just as in our dreams the things we see do not exist outside our consciousness, so also in our waking life distinctions between knowledge and the object of knowledge are not real. When we see a blue object our consciousness is blue. If we next see a yellow object, the blue consciousness is destroyed and our consciousness changes to yellow. How, then, can consciousness be called eternal? This is their objection to Jiva Gosvami's conclusion that the Absolute Truth is eternal. The Vijïana-vadis reason that an eternal object cannot be the cause of anything since in general a cause transforms into its effect. For example, since milk transforms into yogurt, it cannot be eternal. Similarly, the nondual consciousness, being the cause of everything, must undergo transformation and therefore cannot be eternal. Further, they say, everything is changing at every moment, although we may not notice the moment-by-moment change, just as we do not notice the moment-by-moment growth of plants or our bodies. To the Vijïana-vadis' argument Srila Jiva Gosvami replies not with a logical refutation but by quoting Srimad-Bhagavatam, the supreme pramana. The Bhagavatam verse given here (12.13.12) explains that the nondual reality is characterized by oneness of the Supreme with the individual selves. Thus the oneness of reality is not the Buddhists' oneness of momentary consciousness and its objects. This reality is advaya-jïana, the essence of all the Upanisads and the subject matter of Srimad-Bhagavatam; it is not momentary but eternal, conscious, and blissful by nature; it is the cause of everything in this universe; and it can achieve everything simply by its will. All this implies that the advaya-jïana is endowed with multifarious potencies. It is called Brahman because it is the greatest and because it can make others great: brhattvad brmhanatvac ca yad brahma paramam viduh (Visnu Pur. 3.3.21). The various sruti statements cited in this TEXT describe all these characteristics of Brahman. So the theory of consciousness of the Ksanika-vijïana-vadis does not agree with either sruti or Srimad-Bhagavatam. The Vijïana-vadis' theory of reality is based on their assumption that there is no absolute, pure consciousness. The Vijïana-vadis do not know that the absolute reality is a person possessing acintya-sakti, inconceivable potencies, through which He causes everything while remaining unaffected. As the Isopanisad declares in its opening verse, om purnam adah purnam idam purnat purnam udacyate purnasya purnam adaya purnam evavasisyate "The Personality of Godhead is perfect and complete, and because He is completely perfect, all emanations from Him, such as this phenomenal world, are perfectly equipped as complete wholes. Whatever is produced of the Complete Whole is also complete in itself. Because He is the Complete Whole, even though so many complete units emanate from Him, He remains the complete balance." The Vijïana-vadis' view is based on a material conception of changing consciousness. Their understanding does not apply to the absolute realm. While in our ordinary experience material energy is in a constant state of flux, the Lord and His internal energies are not under the same system of natural laws that govern material nature. The example of the spider cited in the previous TEXT also applies here: from within itself the spider produces a special substance and then weaves its web with it, and later it draws the substance back within itself, all without undergoing any transformation. To understand the Absolute Truth, we must first shed all our misconceptions based on material conditioning and simply hear from authentic spiritual authorities in disciplic succession. The Vedic literature therefore recommends that even if a person is highly qualified by good birth, good education, and so forth, he still should present himself as ignorant and foolish at the feet of a bona fide spiritual master, inquire from him submissively, and render service to him. This is the correct process for cleansing one's heart and mind of material contamination, and a sincere candidate for spiritual life who follows this process can gradually gain full realization of the Absolute Truth. The Vijïana-vadis, being followers of Lord Buddha, reject the Vedas, but as seen from the above discussion, they end up with a hopelessly muddled explanation of reality beyond our sensual inspection. They say consciousness is momentary. If this were true, then consciousness could not be the cause of anything, because according to the Nyaya school of logic a cause has to exist for at least two moments. It must exist as the cause for the first moment and then transform or produce the result in the next moment. And if our consciousness were existing for only one moment at a time, we could not remember our past experiences, since there would be no continuity from one moment's consciousness to another moment's consciousness. A person who has experienced something can recall it later on, but if consciousness were momentary there would be nothing to recall in the next moment's consciousness. This is certainly contrary to everyone's experience. Nor can the Vijïana-vadis' idea of the external world withstand the test of logic. They say that the external world is a manifestation of momentary consciousness. Here a question may be asked: Are things perceived as external one with momentary consciousness or different from it? If the Vijïana-vadis claim that the external objects are separately real, then they are agreeing with our Vaisnava opinion and are contradicting their own statement that the apparently external objects are only a manifestation of internal consciousness. On the other hand, if they say that the external objects are one with internal consciousness, in practice there would be no way to distinguish between the momentary, internal consciousness and the objects it perceives. Also, there would be no standard to separate, say, blue consciousness from yellow consciousness, and thus our perceptions would be rife with confusion. As is known from both reason and direct experience, consciousness always has a subject (one who is conscious) and an object (what one is conscious of). If momentary consciousness alone were real, where would its subject and object be? To this the vijïana-vadis offer no satisfactory answer. If neither external objects nor such internal objects as happiness and distress are different from the perceiver, then who is doing the perceiving? Everyone's common experience is that the perceiver, the perceived, and the perception are distinct. In this TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami again clarifies that the oneness of the jiva and Brahman spoken of in sruti should not be understood as absolute oneness. After all, sruti contains such statements as anena jivenatmananupravisya nama-rupe vyakaravani: "Along with this jiva I shall enter as Paramatma and create name and form" (Chandogya Up. 6.3.2). Here the pronoun anena ("this"), referring to the jiva, implies that the jiva is different from "I," the speaker (God). Nonetheless, elsewhere the jiva is described as part and parcel of Brahman, a conclusion confirmed by Srila Vyasa's trance. The reconciliation of this apparent contradiction is that, as we have discussed before, the jiva and Brahman are one in the sense of their sharing the common characteristic of consciousness but are different in their individual identities and potencies. When someone says that Texans and New Yorkers are one, we understand him to mean they are from the same country, the United States, not that they have no separate identities. The jivas are parts of Brahman, the whole. This is the oneness of Brahman with its parts, its energies, which is the fundamental teaching of the Upanisads and also of Srimad-Bhagavatam. The idea is that in general the part is dependent on the whole and helps it function. When separated from the whole, the part becomes useless, just as a finger lopped off a hand becomes useless. In the same way, the relation between the jivas and the Supreme Lord, who is known as Brahman in the Upanisads, is that of the servants and the served. The jivas have no independent existence. All their problems begin when t hey start considering themselves independent of the Supreme Lord. Correctly understanding the oneness between Brahman and the jivas is a fundamental step in understanding the nature of Brahman. Every jiva directly experiences his own consciousness, and the Upanisads, on the basis of the oneness of Brahman and the jivas, instruct the jivas to extrapolate from that experience some idea of the nature of Brahman. To illustrate this process, Srila Jiva Gosvami gives the analogy of a man born and bred in a cavelike room who has never seen the sun. To educate this man about the sun, someone may point to a ray of sunlight shining into his dark room through a tiny opening and tell him, "This single ray of light is from the sun, an enormous sphere that emanates countless similar rays." From this information the man can get some idea of what the sun is like. The Upanisads use this same method to instruct the jivas about Brahman's status as pure consciousness. Indeed, the jivas are like atomic rays emanating from the sunlike Brahman. The sun's rays are not completely different from the sun, for they originate from the sun, nor are they absolutely one with the sun, since they can be seen apart from the sun and they lack the complete potency of the sun. Similarly, the jivas are neither completely one with Brahman nor completely different from Brahman. In his Sarva-samvadini, Srila Jiva Gosvami calls this relationship between the jiva and Brahman acintya-bhedabheda, "inconceivable, simultaneous oneness and difference." Owing to this relationship, Brahman is described as advaya-jïana, or nondual consciousness, which is the subject of Srimad-Bhagavatam. Thus the word Brahman—as the Upanisads and also Srimad-Bhagavatam use it—should not be misunderstood to mean impersonal Brahman without qualities. The Mayavadis insist on this wrong understanding, but according to logic such an impersonal Brahman cannot exist, because if it did it would possess the attribute of existence, which implies potency, which in turn implies duality—Brahman plus attributes. But Mayavadis abhor duality in the absolute realm. Therefore in no Vedic scripture does the word Brahman mean impersonal Brahman in the sense that the Mayavadis intend. The true conception of Brahman is stated by Suta Gosvami in Srimad-Bhagavatam (1.2.11): brahmeti paramatmeti bhagavan iti sabdyate. "This nondual consciousness is called Brahman, Paramatma, and Bhagavan" Here Suta Gosvami does not say that the Absolute Truth is also called jiva. He includes only the above-mentioned three designations—three names of the same nondual consciousness, which Srimad-Bhagavatam identifies as Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The Absolute Truth appears differently to the practitioners of various spiritual processes, but the Absolute Truth itself does not change. This is the significance of the word sabdyate ("is designated") here. The Brahman described in the Vedic scriptures is Bhagavan, the Supreme Person, Krsna. In the sruti we find two types of statements concerning the relationship between the jivas and Brahman: those statements designating the jiva as part of Brahman and those indicating his oneness with Brahman. The real distinction between these kinds of statements is only one of emphasis on either difference (bheda) or nondifference (abheda). Statements in the Vedic scripture such as nityo nityanam cetanas cetananam ("That one eternal conscious being is the support for the many eternal conscious beings"; Katha Up. 2.2.13) belong to the bheda class. Statements such as sarvam khalv idam brahma ("Indeed, all this is Brahman") belong to the abheda class. The word kaivalya in Bhagavatam 12.13.12 properly means "pure devotion." Although impersonalists commonly use this term to mean final emancipation, or merging into Brahman, Brahman is not ultimately impersonal, as the Mayavadis claim. Their usage of kaivalya is therefore absurd. Kaivalya means liberation, but the real mark of liberation is pure devotional service, not merging into Brahman. Srila Jiva Gosvami will explain this more fully in the Priti-sandarbha. To summarize, each statement in the Vedic scriptures describing the oneness of Brahman and the jivas serves one or more of the following purposes: 1. To distinguish both Brahman and the jivas from inert matter by pointing to consciousness as their common quality. 2. To show that the jivas are fractional parts of the Supersoul. 3. To teach that the jivas are dependent on the Supersoul. 4. To indicate that by becoming an unalloyed devotee of the Lord a jiva can become powerful like the Supreme Lord. 5. To show that living in the material world is not the natural, healthy condition of the jiva. 6. To show that the jiva, whether in conditioned life or in liberation, is dependent on the Lord. 7. To establish that Brahman is the only self-existent reality. One should not think that any statement in the Vedic scriptures about the oneness of Brahman and the jivas asserts their absolute oneness. To know the Supersoul, one must first understand the nature of the individual self, the jiva. Thus in the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami begins explaining the characteristics of the self.

If one first understands that this "you" is conscious and eternal, then one can easily understand how the Supreme Brahman (tat) has a similar nature. To make just this point, in accordance with the reasoning of Vedanta-sutra [1.3.20]—"One contemplates the jiva in order to know the other, the Supreme"—sage Pippalayana describes the jiva as having the same nature as tat when he says to King Nimi [Bhagavatam 11.3.38]: "The soul was never born and will never die, nor does it grow or decay. It is actually the knower of the youth, middle age, and death of the material body. It can thus be understood to be pure consciousness, existing everywhere at all times and never being destroyed. Just as the life air within the body, although one, becomes as many in contact with the various material senses, so the soul appears to assume various material designations in contact with its material bodies."

Here atma means "the pure self," and na jajana means "he was never born." Since he has no birth, the self is also free from the next transformation, sustained existence. Naidhate means "he does not increase"; since he does not increase, he does not undergo transformation. The word hi means "because," the idea of logical reason. Vyabhicarinam means "of all impermanent things," namely the living entity's various bodies in childhood, adolescence, and so on, or else the living entity's bodies in the various species of life—demigods, humans, and others. The self is the savana-vit, the witness of each of these stages of life. Certainly this witness is not subject to the varying conditions of what he merely observes. In answer to the question "Who is this unchanging self?" Pippalayana says, "He is pure consciousness, nothing but awareness." How does he exist? "He is eternally present everywhere throughout the body."

"But how can we consider consciousness ever-present, since we experience that after our consciousness of something blue disappears our consciousness of something yellow appears?" Pippalayana answers, indriya-balena ("by the power of the senses"), indicating that although consciousness is always present and is one, the power of the senses causes it to appear variegated. In other words, it is not consciousness itself that appears and disappears; rather, what appear and disappear are the various mental states in the form of perceptions of something blue and so on. Thus the first argument [presented to help identify the Absolute Reality] is based on the difference between the things that appear and disappear and that which is not subject to such changes. The second argument is based on the difference between the observer and the objects he observes. The example of the life air shows how something unchanging can exist in the midst of ephemeral objects.

COMMENTARY Characteristics of the Soul As mentioned above, the Vedic statements that describe nondifference between the jiva and Brahman do so in reference to the common attributes of both. One popular example of such a statement is tat tvam asi, "You are that." Here the word tat and tvam signify Brahman the jiva, respectively, who both possess the attribute of consciousness. The idea behind this statement is that one who clearly understands the jiva's spiritual nature can easily grasp the nature of Brahman. The same idea lies behind the analogy Srila Jiva Gosvami gave in the previous Text, in which a man in a cave learns about the sun by being instructed about a sun-ray. This technique has also been used in the Vedanta-sutra (1.3.20): anyarthas ca paramarsah. "One reflects [on the jiva] for the sake of understanding the other [Paramatma]." Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana comments: "This sutra refers to the dahara-vidya portion of the Chandogya Upanisad (8.1), which describes meditation on the Supersoul in the small space (dahara) within the heart. The body of the worshiper is considered the city of Brahman, in which lies the Supersoul, the worshipable Lord within the dahara. The worshiper is supposed to meditate on the eightfold qualities belonging to the Supersoul. These eight qualities are listed in the Chandogya Upanisad (8.7.1): `The Supersoul is free from sin, old age, death, sorrow, hunger, and thirst. He has unfailing desires and unfailing determination.' But further along (Chandogya Up. 8.12.13), mention is made of a blissful one who rises out of the body, attains to the light, and becomes situated in his own real nature. He is called the purusottama." This purusottama, according to Baladeva Vidyabhusana, is the jiva who has attained perfection by acquiring transcendental knowledge of the Supreme Lord. This raises an obvious doubt: Why in the midst of this description of the dahara, dealing with meditation on the Supersoul, is the jiva mentioned? To answer this doubt, the above sutra (V.s. 1.3.20) is quoted. The reference to the jiva in the dahara-vidya is not simply to convey knowledge about the jiva but to lead to knowledge about the Supersoul, and by knowing the Supersoul the jiva attains his real nature. In Srimad-Bhagavatam 11.3.38, Pippalayana Yogendra similarly instructs King Nimi about the jiva to educate him about the nature of the Lord. The purpose of the above-mentioned verse spoken by Pippalayana is to distinguish the self from the body. The body undergoes six types of changes. These are listed in the Nirukta (1.1.2): jayate 'sti vardhate viparinamate 'paksiyate nasyati ca. "The body takes birth, exists for some time, grows, undergoes changes, dwindles, and finally dies." The soul, however, does not undergo any of these changes, as Lord Krsna confirms in Chapter Two of the Bhagavad-gita. The argument for the soul not undergoing these changes is that he is their continuous observer. A man sitting in a moving airplane and unable to look out the window cannot understand how fast it is going, but an observer on the ground can easily understand. Similarly, we do not feel the earth rotating because we are riding on it, but the astronauts can easily see this from their space vehicles. The objection of the Ksanika-vijïana-vadis discussed in the previous Text—namely, that consciousness is only momentary—is repeated here (in TEXT 53.3) and answered differently. The momentary consciousness of which they speak actually consists of changes in one's mental state. It is produced by the senses interacting with the external world. Consciousness itself is constant. The Vedanta explains that when a person looks at an object there arises a particular mental state, called a vrtti, which the soul perceives. The mental state itself is not the perceiver. But the Buddhists, who are totally ignorant about the soul, mistake this temporary, ever-changing vrtti for the real consciousness. This point is further clarified with the analogy of the life air. Air is one, but air within the body has various names, such as prana, apana, and samana, according to the function it performs. Similarly, the soul is one, but on account of the senses, the consciousness the soul manifests while in the body appears many-branched and ever-changing. This phenomenon is similar to the way in which sweetened milk gives rise to different mental states when perceived with different senses: to the eyes it is white, to the tongue sweet, and so on. So it is not the self but only the mental state affected by varieties of sense perception that appears and disappears, or undergoes changes. The living entity is a fractional part of the Supreme Lord, and since the Lord is conscious and eternal the living entity must share these qualities, just as a tiny gold nugget shares the qualities of the mother lode. And the purpose of explaining the conscious and eternal quality of the soul with logic and personal experience is to help us develop an understanding of the Supersoul. Srila Jiva Gosvami derives two arguments from the words of Pippalayana (Bhag. 11.3.38), both of which serve to distinguish the soul from the material body. The first argument is based on the changes that occur in the material body. We see these changes as time progresses, but with some reflection we can understand that we ourselves have not changed but are the same person. Since the attributes of changelessness and transformation cannot be attributed to the same object, the unchanging soul must be distinct from the changing body. Sri Jiva's second argument is based on the distinction between the perceiver and the perceived. The body and mind cannot be the observer, because they are objects of perception. Thus the perceiver, the soul, must be different from them. In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami presents further logic to help distinguish the self from the body.

Expanding further on this example, Pippalayana Rsi uses the analogy of the senses' dissolution to demonstrate the soul's changelessness: "The spirit soul is born in many different species of life within the material world. Some species are born from eggs, others from embryos, others from the seeds of plants and trees, and others from perspiration. But in all species of life the prana, or vital air, remains unchanging and follows the spirit soul from one body to another. Similarly, the spirit soul is eternally the same despite its material condition of life. We have practical experience of this. When we are absorbed in deep sleep without dreaming, the material senses become inactive, and even the mind and false ego are merged into a dormant condition. But although the senses, mind, and false ego are inactive, one remembers upon waking that he, the soul, was peacefully sleeping" [Bhag. 11.3.39]. Here andesu means "among those born from eggs," pesisu means "among those born from wombs," tarusu means "among those born from plants," aviniscitesu means "among those born from perspiration or heat," and upadhavati means "follows."

Having thus shown the changeless quality of the life air, sage Pippalayana now compares the soul to it and in this way demonstrates that the soul is also changeless. How is this? The soul appears to be changing either when he is in contact with his senses during waking consciousness or when he is connected only with his ego while sleeping and dreaming, at which time his ego is filled with impressions from the waking state. But when the soul is in deep sleep, the senses and ego become temporarily submerged or dissolved, and only the changeless, essential soul remains. How does he remain? Asayam rte: without the “containing vessel,” the limitation of the subtle body. That is to say, he is free from the upadhis that impose changes upon him.

But, one may object, when everything up to and including the ego is dissolved, only a void should remain. Why then is it said that even at this time the changeless soul is present? Pippalayana answers, tad-anusmrtir nah: “We remember it.” When we, the perceivers of waking life, wake up from deep sleep, we each remember our self as the constantly existing soul who witnessed the condition of deep sleep. We say, “I slept happily for so long and was not aware of anything.” Since a person cannot remember what he has not experienced, the soul must perceive the experience of deep sleep, though this experience is indistinct because he is cut off from the objects of external sensation.

We can therefore conclude that the soul, who is pure awareness, is also aware of itself, just as an entity such as the sun, which is in substance pure light, also reveals itself by that light. We find the following confirmation in sruti: “It is true that he [the soul] is not seeing—or rather that although seeing, he does not see externally visible objects. But it is not possible to remove the seer’s sight altogether” [Brhad-aranyaka Up. 4.3.23]. This [idea that the soul is aware even during deep sleep] constitutes the third argument [presented to help us identify the Absolute Reality]; it is based on the distinction between the witness and the objects witnessed. We can also understand the fourth argument, which is based on the distinction between the unhappy sufferer and the focus of ecstatic love.

COMMENTARY The Soul Is Distinct from the Body In the previous TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami cited the analogy of the life air given in Srimad-Bhagavatam 11.3.38 to show the changeless nature of the soul. The following verse (Bhag. 11.3.39) develops this analogy further. There Sage Pippalayana explains that the life air continuously follows the soul into various species of life, which fall into four categories based on their source of birth. The life air enters the various bodies and seems to undergo transformations, but in fact it remains unchanged. For example, the soul's life air may occupy the body of an ant in one life and that of an elephant in a different life, yet all the while the life air remains unchanged. Similarly, the soul appears to undergo changes in association with the many states and shapes of his successive bodies, but in fact he remains unchanged. The soul experiences three states of consciousness while in the body: the waking state, the dreaming state, and the state of deep, dreamless sleep. During the waking state a jiva is conscious of his gross body, gross senses, and mind, and his consciousness seems divided and channeled by the mind and senses. In the dreaming state the gross senses become inactive, or, to be more precise, the mind loses contact with them, and thus the jiva is also not aware of the gross senses or the gross body. Through dreams the jiva in this state perceives the various impressions created in the subconscious mind during the waking state, and because of the jiva's attachment to these impressions, his consciousness seems to undergo transformation. In the state of deep, dreamless sleep the soul loses contact even with the mind, and thus he is not conscious of either his gross or subtle body. According to sruti, in the state of dreamless sleep the mind enters into the puritat nerve in the heart: atha yada susupto bhavati yada na kasyacana veda hita nama nadyo dva-saptatih sahsrani hrdayat puritatam abhipratisthante, tabhih pratyavasrpya puritati sete. "When [the soul] is fast asleep, he does not know anything. At that time the mind removes itself from the seventy-two thousand nerves (hita) spreading out from the heart and enters into the nerve called puritat, where it rests." (Brhad-aranyaka Up. 2.1.19). Feelings of happiness and distress are states of the mind and therefore part of the "field" of the subtle body. This is described in Bhagavad-gita (13.7): "Desire, hatred, happiness, distress, the aggregate [the physical body], the life symptoms, and convictions— these are considered, in summary, to be the field of activities and its interactions." As mentioned above, in deep sleep the soul loses contact with the mind and feels no material happiness or distress, no desires or hatred. He tastes only the bliss of the self. But this does not mean the soul becomes liberated in deep sleep. He is still bound by his subtle desires, which return him to the dreaming and waking states. From the Buddhists comes an objection that the soul cannot exist in deep sleep. When there is no experience of the senses or the mind, why not assume that only the "void" remains during deep sleep? The answer is "Because we recollect the experience of deep sleep." After waking from deep sleep a person may declare, "I have slept happily and wasn't aware of anything." Since someone cannot recollect something without having experiencing it, the person who perceived himself in deep sleep and the person who remembers this experience must be identical. Thus the happiness of deep sleep was experienced by the same person who recalls it upon awakening, but his recollection is hazy because during deep sleep his link with the mind and senses was broken. The implication here is that although there is no false ego manifest during deep sleep, the soul's real ego remains, for this is his true and inseparable identity. So there is no possibility of voidness during deep sleep, as the Buddhists claim, nor is it possible that the soul becomes mere consciousness without individuality, as the Mayavadis claim. This argument establishes that the soul's quality of cognition is an essential aspect of its nature. It is thus not true that the soul acquires cognition only when conditioned, nor that he remains solely as pure consciousness in the unconditioned state. As the sun illuminates both itself and other things as well, the soul can always know both himself and other things. The soul does not need help from the gross external senses to know itself, just as one does not need a lamp to see the sun. This quality of cognition stays with the soul throughout all his states of existence, even when he inhabits lower species, just as a light bulb continues to emit light even when enveloped by a nearly opaque covering. The covering simply limits and distorts the light's diffusion. Of course, it is the Supreme Lord who grants the soul his self-luminous nature, and so from the above we should not wrongly conclude that the jiva is a completely independent entity. The passage from the Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad quoted in this TEXT states, "He [the soul] certainly does not see." This statement refers to the soul in deep sleep. At that time the soul does not perceive anything because he is detached from the mind and senses; this does not mean, however, that his power of perception is lost. Thus the passage further says, "Although seeing, he does not see externally visible objects." In the previous TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami showed that the soul is distinct from the body. He substantiated this conclusion by citing the analogy of the life air. Here he has further shown that the soul is distinct both from the body and from the Supersoul. He presented four arguments. We have discussed the first two in our COMMENTARY on TEXT 53. The third argument is based on the difference between the witness and the witnessed. During deep sleep, when the soul ceases to identify with the mind and senses, he witnesses his own self, and he can recollect this experience upon awakening. This phenomenon demonstrates the changeless nature of the soul by showing that it is distinct from the ever-changing body and senses. The fourth argument is based on the fact that it is not the Supersoul but the jiva who suffers material tribulations, although both dwell in the same body. The Supersoul is the witness of both the soul and the activities of the soul's material body. As we have pointed out, in the state of dreamless sleep the soul becomes temporarily dissociated from his subtle and gross body, but still the body does not die. This indicates that the breathing, heartbeat, blood circulation, and other vital functions continue by the grace of the Supersoul. Another inference we can draw is that the soul is dependent on the Supersoul, because if the soul were completely independent he would not choose to revert to a state beset with suffering. But in fact he cannot stop this reversion, being caught up in the states of material existence—waking consciousness, dreaming, and deep sleep. Therefore, Srila Jiva Gosvami concludes, the Supreme Lord is the fitting object of love, since he is totally free from material bondage. In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami summarizes these points.

[These arguments] can be summed up as follows: Here we have four kinds of arguments in the modes of both exclusion and inclusion. The first argument is based on the difference between what takes birth and dies and {tad-avadhi}. The second is based on the difference between the seer and the seen. The third is based on the difference between the witness and the witnessed. The fourth argument, given to aid our understanding, is based on the difference between the miserable sufferer and the focus of pure love. The verse under discussion [Bhag. 11.3.39] is spoken by Sri Pippalayana to King Nimi.

COMMENTARY Summary of Sri Pippalayana's Teachings Here Srila Jiva Gosvami summarizes the conclusions of the last two Texts. According to Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana, in this TEXT the word tarka (literally "reasoning" or "logic") means "inference," which is one topic of epistemology. In the reasoning presented in this Text, Jiva Gosvami uses inference both positively and negatively. Positively, there is the general principle that when a soul and a body combine, changes occur that the soul perceives. Negatively, one never perceives changes in the soul or changelessness in the body. Thus by both positive and negative analysis we can infer that the body and the soul are distinct. We can apply a similar analysis to the other three arguments set forth in this Text. Here we use logic to infer the difference between the body and the soul; understanding this difference is the first rung on the ladder of transcendental realization. We can also use logic to infer the difference between the soul and the Supersoul; understanding this difference is the necessary foundation of bhakti-yoga. Here we are not employing dry logic, which is based on a limited mortal's mental wrangling, but rather transcendental logic, which is founded on the authority of Srimad-Bhagavatam's statements and is designed to help raise one to a complete understanding of the Absolute Truth. The scriptures and saintly sages encourage sincere souls who seek to distinguish reality from illusion to use their intellect for this purpose. Only the body takes birth, grows old, becomes diseased, and dies. The soul perceives all these changes, and when he identifies himself with his body he experiences them as miseries. Although distinct from his body, because of false ego the jiva becomes attached to his body and its by-products and thus experiences the body's happiness and distress. The Supersoul witnesses the soul's miseries in his material body but does not experience them as His own. Unperturbed by the actions and reactions of material bodies, He is always distinct from the jiva souls and is the suitable object of their love. We can infer the existence of the Supersoul from the fact that the soul does not create the elements needed for the maintenance of his body and that material nature, being inert, cannot create anything without the help of a sentient being. What's more, the soul takes no part in maintaining the material body during deep sleep, when he is completely aloof from it. In this way, knowing the characteristics of the jiva and his relationship to the body can help us understand something of the Supersoul, Brahman. And taking into account the common quality of consciousness shared by the jiva and Brahman, the latter can be identified as the nondual reality, the subject of Srimad-Bhagavatam. All these conclusions are based on an analysis of the individual jiva's situation. Now Srila Jiva Gosvami begins a new analysis, one based on the total situation of the universe.

dasamasya visuddhy-artham navanam iha laksanam @V1PLUS = varnayanti mahatmanah srutenarthena caïjasa By describing these characteristics of the jiva souls, whose inner nature is pure consciousness, we have in effect described the Supreme Brahman, the subject of Srimad-Bhagavatam, from the individual (vyasti) viewpoint. This is so because the Supreme Brahman is nondifferent from the jiva souls, being the complete whole from whom they emanate in the form of His individual partial expansions. Indeed, He is called the asraya, the fountainhead of all existence. The same nondual reality, Brahman, is also characterized in aggregate (samasti) cosmic terms in the list of a major Purana's ten topics, beginning with primary creation. This list is given in the following two verses: "This Srimad-Bhagavatam describes ten subjects: sarga (primary creation), visarga (secondary creation), sthana (maintenance), posana (mercy), uti (desires), manv-antara (reigns of Manus), isanukatha (pastimes of the Lord and His devotees), nirodha (annihilation), mukti (liberation), and asraya (the substratum or ultimate shelter). To clarify the meaning of the tenth subject, the great souls describe the characteristics of the first nine subjects by prayers, and also by indirect and direct explanations" [Bhag. 2.10.1–2].

Manv-antaresanukathah is a compound of manv-antara ("periods of Manus") and isa-anukathah ("narrations of the Lord's pastimes"). This Srimad-Bhagavatam discusses ten topics, beginning with creation, but the sages' real purpose in describing the characteristics of the first nine is to give us systematic, lucid knowledge of the tenth topic. One might object here that the presentation of the other nine topics does not seem to explain the tenth topic; we reply that in the Bhagavatam the sages explain the tenth topic both directly, by the explicit utterance of prayers and other statements, and also indirectly, through the implied purport of various historical accounts.

COMMENTARY The Purpose of the Ten Topics of Srimad-Bhagavatam Is to Describe the Supreme Lord In previous Texts Srila Jiva Gosvami defined the central focus of Srimad-Bhagavatam by examining the faith and spiritual experiences of Suta Gosvami, Sukadeva Gosvami, and Srila Vyasadeva. In the course of this exposition he explained the nature of the jiva. He then went on to analyze the second verse of Srimad- Bhagavatam, which declares that the Absolute Reality is the Bhagavatam's subject matter. To further define that reality he also referred to the Bhagavatam verse beginning vadanti tat tattva-vidah (1.2.11), which names the three main aspects of the one nondual, supreme consciousness (advaya-jïana). He proposed that to understand this nondual consciousness we should first understand the individual jiva, and therefore he discussed the jiva's position on the basis of two Bhagavatam verses spoken by Pippalayana Rsi. The basic ideas established so far concerning the jiva are that he is conscious, able to know himself and other things, distinct from the material energy, and free of the six types of bodily transformations. The analysis up to this point has thus been from the vyasti perspective, focusing on the situation of the individual jivas. Now Jiva Gosvami begins explaining the Absolute Reality from the viewpoint of the aggregate—the samasti perspective—and he bases his explanation on the ten topics treated in the Bhagavatam's twelve cantos. First he quotes two verses spoken by Sukadeva Gosvami (2.10.1–2), the second of which states that the reason why scripture describes such topics as creation, maintenance, annihilation, and liberation is to help us understand the ultimate topic, the Supreme Lord. Indeed, these other topics are but descriptions of the Supreme Lord's manifold potencies. The Lord is the fountainhead of all these phenomena, and Srimad-Bhagavatam explains them just to illustrate His special characteristics. In some places the Bhagavatam introduces prayers to the Supreme Lord in the course of describing one or more of the other nine topics, and in these prayers the Supreme Person Himself is the object of description. In other places the Lord is described directly, as in the dialogue between Vidura and Maitreya and that between Kapila and Devahuti. In yet other places, the Bhagavatam glorifies the Lord indirectly through historical episodes, such as the accounts of how the Lord saved Pariksit Maharaja from Asvatthama's atomic weapon and of how Sukadeva Gosvami was captivated when he heard verses about Lord Krsna's attributes. In this way Srila Jiva Gosvami shows that the purpose of the nine preliminary subjects discussed in the Bhagavatam is to explain the tenth subject, the advaya-jïana, which is also called the asraya and is the fountainhead of everything. Every person has two types of characteristics—svarupa (personal) and tata-stha (marginal)—and the Supreme Personality of Godhead is no exception. In our present conditioned state we have no experience of His personal features, and so if we hear these described without proper COMMENTARY we may misconstrue them owing to our strong material conditioning. But whether we adopt the aggregate or the individual viewpoint, we can more easily understand the Lord's marginal characteristics manifested within the material nature, for they are within the scope our of our personal experience. Srila Vyasadeva uses the same approach in the Vedanta-sutra. After designating Brahman the subject of the book in the first sutra—athato brahma-jijïasa: "Now, therefore, inquire into Brahman"—he begins discussing the Lord's marginal characteristics in the next sutra—janmady asya yatah: "From Him come the creation, maintenance, and destruction of the universe." Srimad-Bhagavatam similarly discusses ten topics, presenting the first nine to help us understand the tenth topic, the asraya. (Later in the Sandarbhas this asraya will be identified more fully as Lord Sri Krsna.) The first nine topics of Srimad-Bhagavatam deal with various potencies of the Lord, such as His creative potency, sarga-sakti. Understanding these topics helps us appreciate the Supreme Lord as the possessor of these potencies. Then we can come to properly apprehend His personal features and pastimes, which are narrated in the Bhagavatam's Tenth Canto. Without studying the nine preliminary topics of the Bhagavatam, we run the risk of viewing His form and pastimes superficially, of concluding that Krsna is an ordinary human being endowed with some extraordinary powers. But this is far from the truth. Lord Krsna therefore says in the Bhagavad-gita (9.11): avajananti mam mudha manusim tanum asritam param bhavam ajananto mama bhuta-mahesvaram "Fools deride Me when I descend in the human form. They do not know My transcendental nature as the Supreme Lord of all that be." By contrast, those who do understand the Lord's transcendental nature are described as follows: janma karma ca me divyam evam yo vetti tattvatah tyaktva deham punar janma naiti mam eti so 'rjuna "One who knows the transcendental nature of My appearance and activities does not, upon leaving the body, take his birth again in this material world, but attains My eternal abode, O Arjuna" (Bg. 4.9). Therefore, wishing to lead us to the highest plane of transcendence through a proper understanding of the Bhagavatam's tenth subject, the summum bonum, Sukadeva Gosvami first explains the first nine subjects.

Clearly, then, we should study Srimad-Bhagavatam in the order Sukadeva Gosvami presented it, from the first verse onward. Unfortunately, unscrupulous persons do not study the Bhagavatam verse by verse, canto by canto, but rather jump to the Tenth Canto. Yet they pose themselves as learned scholars of the Bhagavatam. Another failing of these false Bhagavatam scholars is their neglect of the mandatory requirement that one must hear the Bhagavatam at the feet of a bona fide guru coming in Vaisnava disciplic succession. Because of this omission they cannot properly relish the ripened fruit of the Vedic tree of knowledge. To all such persons Lord Krsna declares in the Bhagavad-gita (7.25): naham prakasah sarvasya yoga-maya-samavrtah mudho 'yam nabhijanati loko mam ajam avyayam "I am never manifest to the foolish and unintelligent. For them I am covered by My Yogamaya, and therefore they do not know that I am unborn and infallible." The most basic requirement for spiritual study, stipulated in all the Vedic scriptures, is that one must respectfully approach a bona fide spiritual master, humbly serve him, and submissively inquire from him. Then all the secrets of the Vedic teachings will be revealed. This injunction applies to every student, even those who are great intellectuals. The Svetasvatara Upanisad (6.28) therefore states: yasya deve para bhaktir yatha deve tatha gurau tasyaite kathita hy arthah prakasante mahatmanah "Only unto those great souls who have implicit faith in and devotion to both the Supreme Lord and the spiritual master are all the imports of Vedic knowledge revealed." Nothing is revealed to the student without the grace of the spiritual master. Therefore to disregard the principle that one must approach a spiritual master to understand the Absolute Truth is to disrespect the Vedic teachings from the outset and ensure failure. Lord Krsna confirms this in the Bhagavad-gita (16.23): yah sastra-vidhim utsrjya vartate kama-karatah na sa siddhim avapnoti na sukham na param gatim "He who discards scriptural injunctions and acts according to his own whims attains neither perfection, nor happiness, nor the supreme destination." Therefore, to unravel the mystery of Srimad-Bhagavatam one should follow in the footsteps of the previous acaryas and refrain from jumping to the esoteric pastimes described in the Tenth Canto. In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami begins explaining each of the ten topics by quoting their definitions from Srimad-Bhagavatam.

To elucidate the tenth subject, Sri Sukadeva Gosvami speaks seven verses defining each of the ten subjects. [Four of the seven verses are as follows:] "The primary creation of the five gross elements, the five subtle sense objects, the five senses, the mahat-tattva, and the false ego, resulting from the disturbance in the material modes' equilibrium caused by the Supreme Lord, is known as sarga. The secondary creation, effected by Lord Brahma, is called visarga" [Bhag. 2.10.3]. The bhutas mentioned here are the five gross material elements, beginning with ether. The matras are the subtle elements—sound and so on. The indriyas are the perceptive senses. The word dhi ("intelligence") indicates the totality of unmanifest matter, together with false ego. Brahman, the supreme controller, generates these physical and nonphysical elements by causing the modes of material nature to become unbalanced and produce transformations. This is called sarga ("creation.") The secondary creation, by Lord Brahma, is called visarga. Since he is the vairaja-purusa, or "universal person," his creation is also called paurusa. Visarga is the sending forth of moving and nonmoving living beings.

Isanukatha indicates the various descriptions of the Lord's pastimes in His incarnations, and also the descriptions of His faithful devotees' activities" [Bhag. 2.10.4–5]. Sthiti ("maintenance") is vaikuntha-vijaya, the victory of Lord Vaikuntha, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In other words, sthiti indicates the supreme glory of the Lord shown by His maintaining all created beings in their respective situations under His laws. Posanam ("sustenance") indicates how He maintains His devotees by bestowing His grace on them. Manv-antarani ("periods of Manus") indicates the histories of the Manus and other saintly kings who ruled during the Manus' reigns, and also the histories of other saintly people who lived during those periods and received the Supreme Lord's special favor. The deeds of these saints are themselves religious standards, establishing the sad-dharma ("transcendental religion") of worshiping the Lord. With regard to universal maintenance, uti ("impetuses for action") are desires for various fruitive activities. Isanukathah ("narrations about the Lord") are historical accounts of the Lord's pastimes in His various incarnations, as well as accounts of His faithful followers' activities.

"The merging of the living entity, along with his conditioning, with the mystic lying down of the Maha-Visnu is called the winding up of the cosmic manifestation (nirodha). Liberation (mukti) is the permanent situation of the form of the living entity after he gives up the changeable gross and subtle material bodies" [Bhag. 2.10.6]. When annihilation occurs after a period of universal maintenance, Lord Hari goes to sleep and the jivas follow Him along with their energies, their upadhis. This is called nirodha ("winding up"). Lord Hari's "going to sleep" consists of His closing His eyes to the material creation, and the jivas' "going to sleep" consists of their merging into Lord Hari. If a jiva in that merged state has freed himself from his false, acquired nature—the ignorance and other qualities superimposed on him by material illusion—he attains his original nature; this is called mukti ("liberation").

COMMENTARY Definition of Srimad-Bhagavatam's First Nine Topics Understanding the Supreme Lord means knowing Him along with His potencies, just as understanding the sun means knowing it along with its potency, sunshine. According to the Second Canto of Srimad-Bhagavatam, tenth chapter, the material world is a creation of the Lord and reflects His personality. This world perpetually goes through cycles of creation, maintenance, and annihilation. During annihilation all the material elements are unmanifest because they have merged into the original, dormant state of material nature, called prakrti or pradhana. In this phase the three modes of nature are in balance and thus inactive. At the end of the period of annihilation the Supreme Lord agitates the modes of nature by glancing upon them, and then the next stage of creation begins. This agitated state of the material modes is called the mahat-tattva, which, when further activated by the time factor, gives rise to material ego, ahankara. From ahankara come the five gross material elements (earth, water, fire, air, and ether), the five subtle elements (smell, taste, form, tactility, and sound), and the five perceptive senses (the senses of smell, taste, vision, touch, and hearing). This phase of creation is called sarga, or the primary creation. The subsequent creation is conducted by Lord Brahma and is called visarga, or the secondary creation. Brahma is also called Purusa or Vairaja. Lord Visnu oversees the maintenance of the rules and regulations governing universal affairs, and this maintenance is called sthiti or sthana. The maintenance function shows Visnu's preeminence over Lord Brahma and Lord Siva, who are in charge of the secondary creation and of destruction, respectively. To carry out the function of sthiti the Lord incarnates in every millennium, as He states in the Bhagavad-gita (4.8): paritranaya sadhunam vinasaya ca duskrtam dharma-samsthapanarthaya sambhavami yuge yuge "To deliver the pious and to annihilate the miscreants, as well as to re-establish the principles of religion, I advent myself millennium after millennium." And the grace the Lord showers on the pious is called posana. Each day of Lord Brahma contains fourteen periods, each of which is ruled over by a Manu. The Manus are godly persons empowered to look after the welfare of all human beings. The activities of each Manu, along with the deeds saintly people perform during the Manus' reigns, constitute manv-antara. How these saintly persons behave and worship is called sad-dharma. Impelled by their karma, living beings perform various material activities during the sthiti, or maintenance, of the creation, and these activities give rise to various desires for further material activities. These desires, in the form of impressions within the mind, are called uti. The descriptions of the Lord's pastimes with His associates during His incarnations in this material world are called isanukatha. The creation cycle begins when the Lord glances at material nature: sa iksata lokan nu srjeti, sa imal lokan asrjata. "He glanced and desired to create people. Indeed, He created them" (Aitareya Up. 1.1).

When it is time for annihilation, the Lord turns His eyes away from the creation, and this turning away is called His sleep, or cosmic rest. Next all the material elements become unmanifest in the reverse order in which they appeared, and the material nature then exists in equilibrium. At that time the jivas give up their gross bodies, but they remain conditioned by their subtle bodies, which are composed of their karmic impressions. This inactive state of the jivas is called sleep, corresponding to the Lord's sleep, and this phase of existence is called nirodha. When the time comes for the creation cycle, the jivas receive bodies according to part of the karma they accrued in the previous cycle. During the maintenance period, if a living being takes to the devotional service of the Lord and attains perfection he is freed from both his subtle and gross bodies and is situated in his original nature. This condition is called mukti, which is also a type of nirodha. However, in contrast to the nirodha that occurs at the time of universal annihilation, when the jiva attains mukti he is not compelled to take birth again in the material world. Rather, all his miseries come to an end and he enters the spiritual planets, where he eternally resides in his original, spiritual form. One can attain this state of eternal liberation only by practicing devotional service to Lord Krsna, as Srila Vyasadeva saw in His trance. The Supreme Lord, the tenth topic discussed in Srimad-Bhagavatam, is the foundation of the other nine topics. The events that occur under the headings of these topics all take place by His potency; indeed, the very reason why the Srimad-Bhagavatam describes these topics is to help us come to know the Supreme Personality of Godhead, for a person is known by His works and attributes. In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami defines the asraya-tattva, the fountainhead of all existence, who is the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Thus

He is the Supreme Fountainhead, the Absolute Truth" (Bhag. 2.10.7). In this verse the abhasa ("appearance") is material creation, and the nirodha ("cessation") is its dissolution. The word yatah refers to the one from whom the creation emanates, by whom it is made perceivable to the jivas' senses (adhyavasiyate), and in whom it is dissolved. That renowned fountainhead of existence—the asraya—is known as Brahman (the Supreme Truth) and Paramatma (the Supersoul). Here the word iti expresses the idea of a complete category, thus implying that Bhagavan, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, is included as well. Later we shall explain the asraya in detail.

COMMENTARY Defining Srimad-Bhagavatam's Tenth Topic Srimad-Bhagavatam's description of the aforementioned ten topics culminates in the description of the asraya-tattva. A book that treats too many subjects will bewilder the reader and make it difficult for him to ascertain its ultimate purpose. This is clearly not the case with the Bhagavatam, however, for as stated here, the shelter of all the topics is the Supreme Lord. None of the other topics can be described without reference to the Lord, and indeed the whole reason why Srila Vyasadeva included them was to throw light on the Lord's energies and activities. In other words, Srimad-Bhagavatam is really about only one topic—the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The Lord creates the world, maintains it, and supplies the living beings with the senses and intelligence to perceive it. He blesses these suffering jivas with the Vedic instructions so that the seriously inquisitive can understand Him, and also with the association of His devotees to guide them. Despite these blessings, most jivas remain engaged in material activities, but some develop a desire to know the Lord. These can receive His grace and eventually attain mukti, liberation, which entails becoming situated in one's own svarupa, or original nature. This is possible only by the Lord's mercy, which is available to one who understands in truth the asraya- tattva described in Srimad-Bhagavatam. Thus it is rightly said that the purpose of the other nine topics is to explain the tenth topic, the asraya, who is the source of creation and annihilation. (The asraya is called Brahman by followers of jïana-yoga, and Paramatma by followers of astanga-yoga.) The word ca ("and") in this verse (Bhag. 2.10.7) indicates the topics of the Bhagavatam not explicitly mentioned in the verse, such as posana. The word iti indicates Bhagavan, the term that the followers of bhakti-yoga use to designate the asraya. Thus this verse echoes one quoted earlier, namely the verse which includes the words brahmeti paramatmeti bhagavan iti sabdyate (Bhag. 1.2.11), which states that the nondual supreme consciousness is called Brahman, Paramatma, and Bhagavan. In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami gives further arguments to support the proposition that the Supreme Lord is the asraya, or shelter of everything.

He does this to clarify the nature of the asraya, which he describes by referring to the direct, common experience of the individual microcosm: "This adhyatmika-purusa is the same as the adhidaivika-purusa, and he who creates the differentiation between these two is called the adhibhautika-purusa. In the absence of any one of these we do not perceive the other two. He who knows these three is the Lord, who, being independent of everything else, is the support of His own self and is the true asraya" [Bhag. 2.10.8–9].

The jiva, the seer, who identifies himself as the owner of his eyes and other senses, is the adhyatmika person. He is indeed also the adhidaivika person, the sun and other deities presiding over the eyes and other senses.

Before the physical body is created, the senses have nowhere to reside and so cannot act. Consequently at this point the adhyatmika and adhidaivika persons are indistinguishable, since there has yet to appear a distinction between the functions of the ordinary jivas, who consider themselves independent actors and the illuminators of their senses, and the deities who help them. And that person because of whom there arises the conception of duality between the presumed owner of the senses and their presiding deities is called adhibhautika, the visible body consisting of the eyeball and other physical sense organs. This physical body is said to be a "person" because it is an upadhi superimposed upon the real person, the jiva. The sruti states, "This [adhibhautika] person consists of food and vital fluids" [Taittiriya Up. 2.1.1].

COMMENTARY The Lord Is the Ultimate Shelter In the previous TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami showed that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the asraya-tattva, the support of everything, even from the macrocosmic viewpoint. Now he further explains that the Lord is the support of each individual in his day- to-day sensory experiences. The originally pure living being who misidentifies himself with the senses is called the adhyatmika-purusa, the presiding deities of the senses are called the adhidaivika-purusa, and the visible physical body, along with the sense objects, is called the adhibhautika-purusa. The adhibhautika-purusa creates the distinction between the adhyatmika-purusa and the adhidaivika-purusa. Before the birth of one's body, one cannot distinguish the latter two purusas because they are merged as if they are the same jiva. In this regard Sripada Baladeva Vidyabhusana writes, dehotpatteh purvam api jivena sardham indriyani tad-devatas ca santy eva: "Even before the creation of the gross body, the senses and their presiding deities are present with the jiva." At this stage there is no distinction between the deities and the jivas, because no physical body exists yet. When the physical body comes into existence the senses come and sit in it, and their respective presiding deities take charge of them. At that time one can distinctly perceive the activities of the presiding deities. The eyes, ears, and other senses that we see in the physical body are not the real senses: rather, they are the seats for the actual senses, which are subtle. Lord Krsna confirms this in the fifteenth chapter of the Bhagavad-gita. After asserting that the living entity is His eternal fragmental part, the Lord states that the jiva attracts the mind and five senses, which are situated in material nature, meaning that the jiva accepts them as his own. Krsna then says that when the soul quits his body he carries his five senses and his mind from their seats into his next body, just as the air carries aromas. Obviously, at the time of death the visible ears and eyes do not disappear. Rather, the subtle senses situated in them, along with the mind, are carried away by the soul. Another reason why the physical body is called purusa, or "person," is that the soul identifies himself with it. This illusion prompts a person to say "I am sick" when actually his body is sick. All bodily designations, such as "small man," "tall man," "American," "Indian," "boy," and “girl,” are based on the jiva’s illusion that he is the material body. The Vedic statement Srila Jiva Gosvami quotes in this TEXT confirms the usage of the term purusa for the body. In the next TEXT Jiva Gosvami explains the second of the two Bhagavatam verses he quoted in TEXT 59.1, namely 2.10.9.

The verse beginning ekam ekatarabhave [Bhag. 2.10.9] shows how the fact that all of these [purusas] are mutually dependent in effect means that none of them is the asraya. The explanation is as follows: Without the presence of the visible object there is no basis for the existence of either the sense organ (whose presence is inferred from perception of the object) or the seer. And without the seer, the sun-god and other presiding deities of perception also have no basis for existing. Without the presiding deity of sight, the sense of sight cannot act, and without the sense of sight there can be no perception. Thus in the absence of any one [of the three purusas] we cannot find either of the others. Such being the case, the one who knows all three of these, perceiving them visually as their witness—namely the Supersoul—is indeed the actual asraya, or shelter. In refutation of the idea that the three purusas are shelters for one another, the Supersoul is specifically characterized as svasraya, His own shelter, meaning that He has no other shelter and is consequently the shelter of all others. In this con TEXT the living entity is also called asraya, but only in the sense of emphasizing the partial nondifference between the pure jiva and the Supersoul, who are related as part and whole, respectively.

The pure jiva is designated as the witness in such statements as "Although transcendental, he considers himself a material product" [Bhag. 1.7.5]; "Waking awareness, dream, and deep sleep are the functions of the mind, caused by the modes of material nature. The individual soul has been ascertained to be distinct from these functions, as their witness" [Bhag. 11.13.27]; and "The pure one witnesses the actions of the impure agent, the mind" [Bhag. 5.11.12]. The pure jiva being characterized thus, it cannot reasonably be proposed that this jiva, known as the witness, is the asraya. Alternatively, one might propose that the aspects of adhyatmika and so on are also asrayas. We answer that this is true, but still, since they are dependent on one another, none of them is exclusively the asraya; as the verse beginning ekam states, it is not in the direct, literal sense that they are referred to as asrayas .

Sri-sukah. "Then let the witness (the jiva) be the shelter." In answer the words beginning tritayam are spoken: The witnessing self, the jiva, is called svasraya ("his own shelter"), but in fact his asraya is the Supersoul, who has no other asraya; this is the difference between the two. Thus the Hamsa-guhya prayers [Bhag. 6.4.25] say, “A person who knows the modes of nature may know everything about them, but he does not know the all-knowing one. I worship that unlimited Lord.” Thus it is that the Supersoul, described in such statements as the one beginning abhasas ca [Bhag. 2.10.7], is alone the asraya. The verse under discussion [Bhag. 2.10.9] was spoken by Sri Suka.

COMMENTARY The Jiva Is Not the Ultimate Shelter Srila Jiva Gosvami shows here that except for the Supreme Lord none can be the asraya, Srimad-Bhagavatam’s tenth topic. From a cursory look, the jivas and presiding deities appear to be the asrayas. The jiva, or conditioned soul, is the asraya for his gross body, and the presiding deities are the asraya for the senses. But none of them can be asrayas independent of the others. For example, without a gross body the conditioned jiva would be unable to see a flower because the distinction between the presiding deity of the eyes and the jiva would not then be manifest. Conversely, when the body is manifest, then the senses come and sit in their respective seats and are presided over by their respective demigods. Still, if the demigods do not provide support, the senses cannot perceive. The presiding deity of the eye, for example, is the sun. Without the sun’s light the eye cannot perceive visible objects, even with the jiva’s support. For proper perception all three supports must be present: the jiva (the adhyatmika-purusa), the gross body (the adhibhautika-purusa), and the demigods (the adhidaivika-purusa). The one who witnesses all the activities of these three purusas is the Paramatma, who is the asraya for Himself as well as the jiva. He is the ultimate asraya. Although the jiva witnesses his own various mental states, he is not their ultimate basis. Sometimes the jiva is referred to as the asraya in consideration of his being a minute fraction of the Lord and thus nondifferent from Him, but the jiva is never the asraya in the primary sense. The jiva is the marginal energy of the Supreme Lord, the energetic, and as such the jiva is always dependent on Him. Still, because the jiva is part and parcel of the Lord he has some of His characteristics in very minute degree, just as a drop of ocean water has some of the ocean’s qualities. But only some: The ocean has waves, tides, and storms, none of which a single drop can accommodate. Also, unlike the drop of ocean water, the ocean shelters the whole oceanic world and is suitable for sailing or surfing. Similarly, the Supreme Lord is the shelter and source of happiness for all existence, a position no sane jiva can claim. Thus the jiva, although one with the Lord in some respects, should not be considered the object of worship independent of the Lord, the basis of all existence. The Lord is the Supreme substratum or shelter for Himself as well as others. This is the import of Sukadeva Gosvami’s statements explaining the various topics treated in Srimad- Bhagavatam. Jiva Gosvami will now quote Srila Suta Gosvami as the latter draws the same conclusion from a slightly different angle while explaining the characteristics of a Maha-purana.

dasabhir laksanair yuktam puranam tad-vido viduh kecit païca-vidham brahman mahad-alpa-vyavasthaya @VCONTINUE = antarani manv-antarani. In the following two verses Sri Suta Gosvami describes in a different way the characteristics of Srimad-Bhagavatam that qualify it as a Maha-purana, and in so doing he affirms that the Supreme Lord alone is the asraya: "O brahmana, authorities on the matter understand a Purana to contain ten characteristic topics: sarga, the creation of this universe; visarga, the subsequent creation of worlds and beings; vrtti, the maintenance of all living beings; raksa, the sustenance of all living beings; antarani, the rule of various Manus; vamsa, the dynasties of great kings; vamsanucarita, the activities of such kings; samstha, annihilation; hetu, motivation; and apasraya, the supreme shelter. Other scholars state that the great Puranas deal with these ten topics while lesser Puranas may deal with five" [Bhag. 12.7.9–10]. Here the word antarani refers to periods of Manus.

According to some, a Purana has five characteristics: "The five characteristics of a Purana are sarga, creation; pratisarga, annihilation; vamsa, genealogy; manv-antarani, the reign of Manus; and vamsanucaritam, the activities of dynasties of kings and successions of saints" [Matsya Pur. 53.65]. This difference of opinion is due to the different topics that characterize greater and lesser Puranas. Although Puranas such as the Visnu Purana discuss all ten topics, these Puranas are still considered lesser because they discuss only five of the topics in depth.

TEXT 61.3

In Srimad-Bhagavatam there is no intention of discussing the ten topics consecutively, one per canto; after all, the Bhagavatam has twelve cantos. Nor should one think that because the ten topics are listed in the Second Canto they can be found one after another from Canto Three to Twelve, because the three topics of nirodha, mukti, and asraya can all be found in the Tenth, Eleventh, and Twelfth Cantos. Nor will one find the remaining topics in order in the other cantos, with the exception of the Eighth Canto.

TEXT 61.4

Srila Sridhara Svami also indicates this [absence of a strict correspondence between the Bhagavatam's topics and cantos]: "To spread Lord Krsna's glories, the Tenth Canto describes how unrighteous rulers suffered annihilation (nirodha) because they deviated from religious principles. The four types of annihilations of the total material nature have already described earlier." Sridhara Svami's intention here is to show that the Tenth Canto primarily discusses the asraya, the form of Sri Krsna. As Sridhara Svami himself states, "The subject of the Tenth Canto is the tenth topic, the Supreme Lord, who shelters His dependent devotees." We can draw similar conclusions about the other cantos.

Thus Sridhara Svami would agree with us that virtually every canto touches on all ten topics, either directly or indirectly. It is in the same light that we should understand the statement “these topics are described here either directly or indirectly” [Bhag. 2.10.2], since we actually do find these topics discussed both directly and indirectly throughout the Bhagavatam. And for the same reason we should recognize that the First and Second Cantos also belong to this Maha-purana. Therefore we do not accept the idea that these topics are discussed in a strict sequence.

COMMENTARY Sri Suta Gosvami Lists the Ten Topics of Srimad-Bhagavatam Previously Srila Jiva Gosvami showed that Suta Gosvami, Sukadeva Gosvami, and Srila Vyasadeva all agreed about what is the essential message of Srimad-Bhagavatam. Here Srila Jiva Gosvami reiterates this conclusion by citing Suta Gosvami’s statements regarding the characteristics of a Maha-purana. Although the ten topics Sri Suta lists seem to differ from those listed by Sukadeva Gosvami, Srila Jiva Gosvami shows that in essence they are the same. In the Bhavartha-dipika, while commenting on verse 12.7.9 of Srimad-Bhagavatam, Sridhara Svami offers the following reconciliation between Sukadeva’s list and Suta’s list: “Sarga and visarga are found in both lists. Sthana in the first list is called vrtti in the second, posana is called raksa, uti is called hetu, manv-antara is called antara, and isanukatha is called vamsa and vamsanucaritam. Nirodha and mukti are both called samstha in the second list.” (Mukti can also be counted as one of the four types of annihilations mentioned in TEXT 63). Below is a table comparing the two lists of ten topics: TOPICS IN THE BHAGAVATAM

Listed by Sri Sukadeva Gosvami Listed by Sri Suta Gosvami 1. Sarga (primary creation) Sarga 2. Visarga (secondary creation) Visarga 3. Sthana (maintenance) Vrtti 4. Posana (sustenance) Raksa 5. Uti (material desires) Hetu 6. Manv-antara (reigns of Manus) Antara 7. Isanukatha (activities of Lord and His devotees) Vamsa, Vamsanucarita 8. Nirodha (annihilation) Samstha 9. Mukti (liberation) Samstha 10. Asraya (the supreme shelter) Apasraya A Maha-purana deals extensively with these ten topics, while a lesser Purana deals with only five—sarga, creation; pratisarga, dissolution; vamsa, the genealogies of kings or sages; manv-antaras, the reigns of Manus; and vamsanucarita, the histories of various sages, kings, and incarnations. In the course of discussing these five topics, a lesser Purana will discuss all ten topics of a Maha-purana, but will treat only these five in depth. This difference in how extensively the ten topics are treated constitutes the principal distinction between a Maha-purana and a lesser Purana. The following table illustrates in what con TEXT a lesser Purana discusses the ten characteristics of a Maha-purana: 1. Sarga Sarga, Visarga, Asraya 2. Pratisarga Nirodha, Mukti 3. Vamsa Isanukatha 4. Manv-antara Manv-antara, Sthana 5. Vamsanucarita Isanukatha, Posana, Uti, Asraya Srimad-Bhagavatam contains twelve cantos, but the list of a Maha-purana’s

topics is in the Second Canto. From this, plus the fact that the first two cantos seem in some ways introductory, some scholars conclude that the Bhagavatam explains these ten topics successively in each canto from the Third Canto onwards. Srila Jiva Gosvami has no regard for this theory. Since a Maha-purana treats ten topics, if the first two cantos of the Bhagavatam described none of these, then the Bhagavatam proper would have only ten cantos. It is obvious enough, however, that the First and Second Cantos discuss at least sarga, visarga, and raksa. Earlier Srila Jiva Gosvami listed the defining characteristics of Srimad-Bhagavatam, and among these were its having eighteen thousand verses and twelve cantos and its beginning with a reference to the Gayatri mantra. If the first two cantos are not really part of the Bhagavatam, then what remains no longer meets the criteria for being the Bhagavatam. Other scholars say that because Sukadeva speaks only from the Second Canto on, the First Canto is not part of the Bhagavatam proper. But their opinion is countered by the same reply. Srila Jiva Gosvami additionally argues that the ten topics of Srimad-Bhagavatam are not described in strict sequence, one per canto. First of all, there are twelve cantos and only ten topics. If we try to resolve this dilemma by excluding two of the cantos, Srimad-Bhagavatam will be reduced to less than the stipulated eighteen thousand verses. Srila Jiva Gosvami further says that although nirodha is the eighth topic, it is discussed profusely in the Tenth, Eleventh, and Twelfth Cantos. This opinion is confirmed by Sridhara Svami, one of the earliest and most respected authorities on Srimad-Bhagavatam. According to the adherents of a successive description of the ten topics beginning from the Third Canto, the Tenth Canto should describe the eighth topic, nirodha, and the Twelfth Canto the tenth topic, asraya. Undoubtedly the Tenth Canto discusses nirodha, but its principal topic is the asraya, whom it establishes to be Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In Srila Jiva Gosvami's opinion, which finds support in Sridhara Svami's writings, all twelve cantos of the Bhagavatam describe all ten topics, though some cantos place more emphasis on certain topics and less on others. In his Sarva-samvadini, Srila Jiva Gosvami specifies which topics are covered extensively in each canto: Topic Cantos Primarily Discussed In 1. Sarga 2, 3 2. Visarga 2, 3, 4 3. Vrtti 3, 7, 11 4. Raksa throughout 5. Manv-antara 8 6. Vamsa 4, 9 7. Vamsanucarita 4, 9 8. Samstha 11, 12 9. Hetu 3, 11 10. Apasraya 10 As mentioned before, the ultimate purpose of Srimad-Bhagavatam is to explain the tenth subject, the asraya, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. It is therefore illogical to expect that the Bhagavatam will deal with the other nine subjects strictly successively, as if presenting mathematical theorems. Instead, the Bhagavatam presents these other subjects primarily to establish and explain the glories of the Supreme Lord. We have no reason to insist on a consecutive order of the ten subjects or to depreciate the first two cantos. From the very start of the Tattva-sandarbha, Srila Jiva Gosvami has proposed that Srimad-Bhagavatam focuses entirely on Lord Sri Krsna, the supreme shelter of all existence. The Bhagavatam describes Sri Krsna in its beginning, middle, and end, and not just in the last canto. Sri Jiva will explain this matter in more detail in Sri Krsna-sandarbha. In the next TEXT Srila Jiva Gosvami presents Suta Gosvami's definitions of the first seven of the ten topics.

Suta Gosvami then describes the features of the ten topics, beginning with creation: "From the agitation of the original modes within the unmanifest material nature, the mahat-tattva arises. From the mahat-tattva comes the element false ego, which divides into three aspects. This threefold ego further manifests as the subtle elements, as the senses, and as the gross sense objects. The generation of all of these is called creation (sarga)" [Bhag. 12.7.11]. The mahat-tattva comes into being when the original, dormant material nature (pradhana) is agitated, and from the mahat comes false ego in each of the three material modes. From this threefold ego come the subtle elements, the senses, and the physical elements. The appearance of the elements implies the appearance of their presiding deities as well. All together, the appearance of these constitutes sarga, the manifestation of the subtle causes of creation.

Suta Gosvami continues: "The secondary creation (visarga), which exists by the mercy of the Lord, is the manifest amalgamation of the desires of the living entities. Just as a seed produces additional seeds, activities that promote material desires in the performer produce moving and nonmoving life forms" [Bhag. 12.7.12]. Here the word purusa ("person") refers to the Supersoul, and etesam ("of these") indicates the elements, beginning with the mahat. The primary reason the elements combine is the karma the jivas have accumulated from their previous lives. Thus the moving and nonmoving living beings take their births in a perpetual cycle, like the generation of one seed from another. This constant flow of generated products is called visarga, secondary creation. In other words, visarga is the creation of the individual organisms, and thus this discussion of visarga includes the topic of uti ("impulses for activity").

"Vrtti means the process of sustenance, by which the moving beings live upon the nonmoving. For a human being, vrtti specifically means acting for one's livelihood in a manner suited to one's personal nature. Such action may be carried out either in pursuit of selfish desire or in accordance with the Vedic injunctions" [Bhag. 12.7.13]. Mobile living beings generally thrive on immobile ones, but the word ca ("and") in this verse hints that, when the desire impels them, moving creatures will also subsist on other moving creatures. For human beings, however, the means of livelihood is prescribed according to their individual natures, on the basis of either selfish desire or scriptural injunction. All this is called vrtti.

This definition of "protection" (raksa) also incorporates the three topics isa-katha ("narrations about the Supreme Lord"), sthana ("maintenance"), and posana ("nourishment").

From the mention here of the activities of the Manus and the others, it is understood that the topic of sad-dharma (“progressive religious principles”) is also covered. In this way this list of ten topics is equivalent to the one given earlier in the Bhagavatam.

COMMENTARY Sri Suta Gosvami Defines the Bhagavatam's Topics At the end of the Second Canto Sukadeva Gosvami lists and defines the ten topics of Srimad-Bhagavatam, and in the Twelfth Canto Suta Gosvami does the same. The first topic is sarga, primary creation. As we have already pointed out, during total dissolution everything in the material universe becomes unmanifest, a state called prakrti or pradhana. In this state the three modes of nature remain in equilibrium. Not until the modes are agitated and put out of balance can creation begin again. This same principle applies to human beings: When a person is satisfied, peaceful, and equipoised he will not initiate some new activity; some stimulus must disturb his equilibrium and motivate him to act. One engages in sex, for example, when one’s mind and body are stimulated by lust or the desire to procreate. The original disturbance in the pradhana is caused by the glance of the Supreme Lord, with which He impregnates prakrti, or material nature, with all the conditioned jivas. Lord Krsna confirms this in the Bhagavad-gita (14.3): mama yonir mahad brahma tasmin garbham dadamy aham. “The total material substance, called Brahman, is the source of birth, and it is that Brahman that I impregnate.” Here the word Brahman means prakrti, not the Lord’s impersonal feature. The impregnated or disturbed state of prakrti is called the mahat-tattva. When further impelled by kala, the Lord’s time potency, the mahat-tattva gives rise to the three kinds of ahankara, or false ego. These include vaikarika ahankara, false ego in the mode of goodness; taijasa ahankara, false ego in the mode of passion; and tamasa ahankara, false ego in the mode of ignorance. Vaikarika ahankara gives rise to manas, the elemental substance of mind, and also to the presiding deities of material creation. Taijasa ahankara gives rise to buddhi, the intelligence, and also to the senses, which are of two types, perceptive and working. When the kala potency acts on tamasa ahankara, sound comes into being, followed by ether and the ear. Under the impulse of time, ether then gives rise to tactility, and then air and the skin evolve. Similarly, air gives rise to form, after which fire and the eye evolve; fire gives rise to taste, and then water and the tongue evolve; and finally water gives rise to smell, after which earth and the nose evolve. The Lord Himself performs this primary phase of creation (sarga), which includes the creation of the abovementioned elements' presiding deities. This is indicated here (in Bhag. 12.7.11) by the word artha. These are the stages of material creation in its primary phase (sarga): PRAKRTI OR PRADHANA (Balanced state of Nature) Glance of the Lord (with Kala) MAHAT-TATTVA (Citta) (Pradhana becomes disturbed) AHANKARA (False Ego)

VAIKARIKA TAIJASA TAMASA (In Goodness) (In Passion) (In ignorance) MIND AND INTELLIGENCE 5 TAN-MATRAS PRESIDING DEITIES AND SENSES (Sound, Touch, Form, Taste, Smell) and 5 material elements.

As mentioned previously, the Bhagavatam distinguishes between the senses and the physical sense organs, the latter being the seats of the former. The above chart shows that false ego in the mode of passion gives rise to intelligence and the senses. These senses are not the sense organs but rather the subtle senses, which accompany the jiva from body to body. The physical sense organs, of course, are dissolved along with the rest of the gross body at death. Each of the five tan-matras, the subtle manifestations of the material elements, becomes mixed with the time energy of the Lord and gives rise to its corresponding gross element and the seat of the corresponding sense organ: TAN-MATRA MATERIAL ELEMENTS SEATS OF SENSES SOUND SKY EARS TOUC HAIR SKIN FORM FIRE EYE TASTE WATER TONGUE SMELL EARTH NOSE The mahat-tattva, ahankara, mind, and intelligence are considered internal senses. These four, plus the five working senses (legs, hands, anus, tongue, and genitals), the five perceptive senses (ears, eyes, nose, skin, and tongue), the five gross material objects (sky, air, fire, water, and earth), and the five subtle elements (sound, tactility, form, taste, and smell) total twenty-four elements, and the jiva and Paramatma can be counted as the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth. Time (kala) is not counted separately, being an energy of the Paramatma. Because pure elements cannot be employed in the process of creation, the five gross material elements listed above must be further combined by the process called païci-karana. In this process each of the elements is mixed with the other four according to a certain ratio. Then Lord Brahma, using these mixed elements, proceeds with the secondary phase of creation, called visarga. He creates the bodies of the myriad living beings according to the stored-up karmic impressions of their previous lives. Visarga includes the manifestation of Brahma's mind-born sons—Atri, Vasistha, Daksa, Manu, and others. Some of these sons are Prajapatis, progenitors, whose offspring populate the universe. The phases of creation continue in cycles, one phase giving rise to the next, like one seed giving rise to another seed. The seeds in this creative process are the living entities' fruitive activities. After sarga and visarga come vrtti, sustenance. As stated in Srimad-Bhagavatam (1.13.47), one living being is generally sustained by eating others: ahastani sa-hastanam apadani catus-padam phalguni tatra mahatam jivo jivasya jivanam "Those who are devoid of hands are prey for those who have hands; those devoid of legs are prey for the four-legged. The weak are the subsistence of the strong, and the general rule holds that one living being is food for another." Usually, immovable beings are food for those that move, but some moving beings, such as tigers, prey on other moving beings. Human beings are special because they can choose what kind of food they will eat. In this matter they can be guided either by their own desires or by Vedic scriptural injunction. Those who eat according to whim glide down to hellish species, while those who follow scripture progress toward liberation. Since Lord Visnu accepts the responsibility of maintaining Vedic culture in the universe, He incarnates in every millennium to protect His devotees and curb the demoniac. This is called raksa, protection. The Lord does not restrict His appearances only to the human species. As Prahlada Maharaja says in his prayers to Lord Nrsimha, ittham nr-tiryag-rsi-deva-jhasavatarair/ lokan vibhavayasi hamsi jagat pratipan: "My Lord, You appear in various incarnations as a human being, an animal, a great saint, a demigod, a fish, or a tortoise, thus maintaining the entire creation in different planetary systems and killing the demoniac principles" (Bhag. 7.9.38). The material creation is manifest for the duration of Lord Brahma's life, one hundred years according to his time scale. His one day lasts for one thousand cycles of the four yugas—Satya, Treta, Dvapara, and Kali. By human calculation, therefore, a day of Brahma lasts 4,320,000,000 years. For managerial purposes he divides each of his days into fourteen periods called manv-antaras. The person who rules during each of these periods is called Manu, who is assisted by his sons; by demigods such as Candra and Varuna; by Lord Indra; by the seven great sages, called sapta-rsis; and by a special partial expansion of the Supreme Lord who incarnates for each particular manv-antara. The demigods and sages are all appointed for the period of one manv-antara, and the activities of these great personalities constitute sad-dharma, or progressive religious principles. At present we are in the period of the seventh Manu, Vaivasvata Manu, more exactly in the 5,092nd year of Kali-yuga, in the twenty-eighth yuga cycle of the day of Brahma called the Svetavaraha-kalpa, during his fifty-first year. Srimad-Bhagavatam names the fourteen Manus, the corresponding incarnations special to their periods, and the names of Indra in these periods: MANU MANU'S FATHER CORRESPONDING NAME OF AVATARA INDRA 1. Learned scholars have designated this topic dissolution (samstha)” (Bhag. [12.7.17]. In this verse the word asya (“His”) refers to the Paramesvara, the Supreme Lord, while svabhavatah (“due to nature”) means “by His energy.” The term atyantikah (“ultimate”) implies that mukti (liberation) is included in this kind of dissolution.

Some authorities call the living being the personality underlying the material creation, while others say he is the unmanifest self” [Bhag. 12.7.18]. The hetu (“cause”) here is the nimitta, or efficient cause. Asya (“of this”) refers to this universe, the existence of which is due to the jivas, who act in ignorance. Some call that same cause the anusayi (“underlying personality”), highlighting the principle of consciousness, while others call him the avyakrta (“unmanifest”), focusing attention on the jivas’ upadhis.

Thus situated in His own transcendence, He is the ultimate and unique shelter” [Bhag. 12.7.19]. It cannot be said that the jiva is the asraya, even in his pure state. That would go against what Srila Vyasadeva experienced in trance. Rather, the correct understanding is as follows: The Supreme Brahman is alone in His original identity. He is always aloof from the states of consciousness known as waking awareness and so on, and also from the manifestations of matter, beginning with the mahat-tattva. All these are products of the external energy, that is to say, creations of His Maya potency. While remaining aloof from all these manifestations, He simultaneously associates with them in His feature as the Supersoul, the supreme witness. Therefore He is the basis for the jivas’ activities in both his pure and his conditioned states. But in this con TEXT the word apasraya indicates that even while He is the foundation for the jivas’ activities He still remains transcendental to everything; the prefix apa refers to “abandonment,” which here amounts to the idea of transcending.

Similarly, both conjointly and separately, the jiva is always present with the created material body throughout its phases of existence, beginning with conception and ending with death. “Either on the strength of one’s own power of discrimination or because of one’s regulated spiritual practice, one’s mind may stop functioning on the material platform of waking consciousness, sleep, and deep sleep. Then the jiva understands the Supreme Soul and withdraws from material endeavor” [Bhag. 12.7.20–21].

After all, we can identify these substances even apart from their products. In the same way, although by the force of ignorance the originally pure spirit soul becomes involved with the nine stages of life from conception to death, he can nonetheless become indifferent by understanding that he is in fact distinct from all this by virtue of his being a pure self. Thus becoming aloof, he is then qualified to inquire about the asraya. That is the purport of the verse beginning virameta [Bhag. 12.7.21]. The vrtti-trayam (“three functional states”) are the states of waking, dreaming, and deep sleep. Atmanam (“Self”) here means the Supersoul. Svayam (“by oneself”) means by carefully studying the illusory nature of the world, as the sage Vamadeva did. Yogena (“by yoga”) indicates that one may conduct this study by means of the kind of meditation Srimati Devahuti and others practiced. Ihaya nivartate (“he becomes free from all actions”) means that he refrains from all activities other than the practice of God-realization. This is our explanation of sambandha, the connection between Srimad-Bhagavatam and the subject it discusses.

Thus ends the Tattva-sandarbha, the first book of the Bhagavata-sandarbha, which was written according to the instructions of Srila Rupa Gosvami and Srila Sanatana Gosvami, the revered leaders of the universal royal assembly of Vaisnavas. They are unalloyed servants of the lotus feet of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya Mahaprabhu, the purifier of the jivas in Kali-yuga, who descended to distribute the benediction of His own devotional service.

COMMENTARY Conclusion The dissolution of the material creation is called samstha, of which Suta Gosvami says there are four kinds—naimittika, prakrtika, nitya, and atyantika. The dissolution that comes at the end of Lord Brahma's day is called the naimittika, or occasional. The dissolution of the universe at the end of Lord Brahma's life is called prakrtika, or complete. The inexorable moment-by-moment progression of everything in the material world toward annihilation is called the nitya, or continuous, dissolution. And when an individual jiva gets free from both his subtle and gross bodies and enters the spiritual sky, that is called the atyantika, or ultimate, dissolution, namely liberation. Having attained this state, one does not have to take birth again in this material world. Thus Srila Jiva Gosvami says that atyantika-laya includes mukti, the ninth topic among the ten topics of Srimad-Bhagavatam Sukadeva Gosvami enumerated in TEXT 56. In his Sarva-samvadini Srila Jiva Gosvami states that, in addition to the dissolutions mentioned above, there is also a partial dissolution at the end of each manv-antara. To substantiate t his statement he cites the Visnu-dharmottara Purana, Srimad-Bhagavatam, and the Bharata-tatparya of Sri Madhvacarya. Part of the reference from the Visnu-dharmottara Purana (1.75.1–2) states: vajra uvaca manv-antare pariksine yadrsi dvija jayate samavastha maha-bhaga tadrsim vaktum arhasi markandeya uvaca manv-antare pariksine deva manv-antaresvarah mahar-lokam athasadya tisthanti gata-kalmasah "King Vajra asked, `O brahmana, what is the situation of the world when a manv-antara ends? Please explain this to me.' "Markandeya replied, `At the end of a manv-antara, the demigods appointed for that particular manv-antara, being free from sins, attain to Maharloka and reside there.'" Markandeya goes on to explain that the seven sages, Manu, and Indra go to Brahmaloka while the earth becomes submerged in a deluge. This description of the general annihilation at the end of each manv-antara is similar to the one given in the Twenty-fourth Chapter of the Bhagavatam's Eighth Canto. Srila Jiva Gosvami comments that the occurrenc of a dissolution at the end of each manv-antara is further substantiated by the Hari-vamsa Purana and commentaries on its chapters dealing with the subject of universal dissolution. Thus the dissolution at the end of a manv-antara can be categorized as naimittika, or occasional, because it occurs repeatedly with the changes of Manus. The hetu, or efficient cause of creation, is the jiva. The Supreme Lord has nothing to gain by creating this material world. He has His own transcendental abode, where He engages in loving pastimes with His dear devotees. But for the welfare of those living beings who have turned their backs on Him, He has created this universe, where the jivas are avidya-karma-karaka, acting out of ignorance and sustaining the universe. In that sense the jivas are the efficient cause behind the creation, even though they neither design nor produce it. As Lord Krsna states in the Bhagavad-gita (7.5), jiva-bhutam maha-baho yayedam dharyate jagat: The living entities sustain the whole material world. The Lord's ultimate purpose in creating the material world is to enable the jivas to attain liberation from the cycle of repeated birth and death. Sukadeva Gosvami states this explicitly in Srimad-Bhagavatam (10.87.2):

buddhindriya-manah-pranan jananam asrjat prabhuh matrartham ca bhavartham ca atmane 'kalpanaya ca "The Supreme Lord manifested the material intelligence, senses, mind, and vital air of the living entities so that they could indulge their desires for sense gratification, take repeated births to engage in fruitive activities, become elevated in future lives, and ultimately attain liberation." From this we can see that the jiva is certainly not the asraya of the universe. According to Srila Vyasadeva's realization in trance, that position belongs to the Supreme Lord. But if the Lord is the asraya of this material world, wouldn't He also necessarily be in contact with Maya and her creation? Sri Suta Gosvami replies that the Supreme Lord is apasraya, the transcendental shelter. In other words, He is the asraya, but He is apart from Maya. In the Bhagavad-gita (7.4) the Lord describes His own material nature as bhinna prakrti, His separated energy. In His original form the Supreme Personality of Godhead is completely aloof from His creation, but as the Supersoul He witnesses and controls the activities of both the jivas and Maya. Thus by His inconceivable potency He both associates with the creation and remains aloof from it. This He also confirms in the Bhagavad-gita (9.4): maya tatam idam sarvam jagad avyakta-murtina mat-sthani sarva-bhutani na caham tesv avasthitah "By Me, in My unmanifested form, this entire universe is pervaded. All beings are in Me, but I am not in them." Yet even though as the Supersoul the Lord pervades the universe and controls it, He is neither in physical contact with it nor influenced by it. In TEXT 53 Srila Jiva Gosvami showed that knowledge of the pure nature of the jiva is the first step in the science of God- realization. Here in TEXT 63 he substantiates this statement with two verses spoken by Sri Suta Gosvami (quoted in TEXT 63.4). In Srimad-Bhagavatam

(11.22.47) Lord Krsna mentions the nine states of bodily existence the jiva experiences: conception, gestation, birth, infancy, childhood, youth, middle age, old age, and death. Although in his conditioned state the jiva seems to associate with these nine states, he never actually does. Just as clay is the essential constituent of a pot yet still exists independent of the pot, so the jiva animates his body but still exists independent of the body and its nine states. When a person knows that, whether awake, dreaming, or merged in deep sleep, he is always distinct from his body during all the nine states, he is qualified to walk on the path of God-realization. That is the stage of athato brahma-jijïasa: One who knows he is distinct from the body is qualified to inquire into the Absolute Truth (V.s. 1.1.1). This TEXT describes two processes for self-realization. The word svayam ("by oneself") implies the path of jïana, in which one meditates on the self as different from everything else in the realm of Maya. The Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad relates the history of a sage named Vamadeva who followed this path, and the Eleventh Canto of Srimad-Bhagavatam tells of another practitioner, Dattatreya. The second process is implied by the word yoga, which means the path of bhakti. On this path one considers oneself different from the three states of existence—the waking state, the dreaming state, and deep sleep—and meditates on the Supersoul. This path is exemplified by Lord Kapiladeva's mother, Srimati Devahuti, whose story is told in the Third Canto of Srimad-Bhagavatam. Srila Jiva Gosvami concludes that the asraya of everything is Lord Sri Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead; He alone is the subject (sambandhi-tattva) of Srimad-Bhagavatam. The following is a summary of Sri Tattva-sandarbha: The first eight Texts, which are in verse form, make up the invocation, or mangalacarana. In these verses Srila Jiva Gosvami prays to his teachers and his worshipable Deity, and he also tells why he is writing the book and defines its subject and the qualifications one must have to read it. In Texts 9 through 26 Jiva Gosvami discusses Gaudiya Vaisnava epistemology. He first points out that all human beings are subject to four defects that prevent them from acquiring perfect knowledge independently. Of the ten means of gaining knowledge Srila Jiva accepts sabda, revealed scripture, as supreme, for it alone can give one perfect knowledge. Since the Vedas are sabda-brahma, knowledge revealed by the Supreme Lord, they are the highest authority. But because they are now unavailable in their complete form, because they are cryptic, and because they can no longer be learned from representatives of a proper disciplic succession of teachers, Srila Jiva Gosvami recommends the Puranas, which, along with the Ramayana and Mahabharata, constitute the fifth Veda. Next Srila Jiva shows that the Puranas have the same source, authority, and nature as the Vedas, and that, for us in this age, their simple language and universal accessibility render them an even better source of knowledge than the other four Vedas. But the Puranas seem to contradict one another in various ways—for example, by glorifying different deities as most worshipable—and most of them lack a proper disciplic succession. By the process of elimination, therefore, in TEXT 18 Srila Jiva Gosvami proposes Srimad-Bhagavatam as the most suitable Purana for investigation. From TEXT 19 to 26 Srila Jiva reveals the supreme qualities of Srimad-Bhagavatam and shows how it is the most authoritative Vedic scripture, the ripened fruit of the desire tree of Vedic knowledge. He shows that the Bhagavatam is based on the Gayatri mantra, the essence of the Vedas, and that it is the natural COMMENTARY on the Vedanta-sutra. In Texts 27 and 28 Srila Jiva describes the basic scheme of the Sandarbhas, what sources he plans to refer to, and his method of analysis. From Texts 29 to 63 he establishes the following principles: 1. The subject matter of Srimad-Bhagavatam is Lord Krsna. 2. Lord Krsna is the original personality of Godhead. 3. He has multifarious potencies, which are divided into three main categories—internal, external, and marginal. 4. Maya, His external energy, works under Him but cannot control Him. 5. The jivas have been bound by Maya since time immemorial. 6. The jivas cannot transcend Maya by their own power. 7. Surrender to the Lord is the jivas' only means of liberation. 8. The goal of life is to attain prema, love of Krsna. To establish these eight principles, Srila Jiva Gosvami first examines the inner mood of Sri Sukadeva Gosvami, the speaker of Srimad-Bhagavatam. In TEXT 29 he quotes and analyzes Sri Suta Gosvami's prayers, which describe Sukadeva's realization and exalted position. Then, from Texts 30 to 49 he examines the description of what Srila Vyasadeva realized in trance, which is the basis upon which he composed Srimad-Bhagavatam. While describing Vyasa's trance, Srila Jiva Gosvami uses logic and scriptural reference in Texts 34 to 43 to decisively smash the two primary doctrines of the Mayavadis, pariccheda-vada and pratibimba-vada. From Texts 50 to 52 he shows that Srimad-Bhagavatam's subject is the nondual supreme reality by analyzing the second verse of its first chapter. In Texts 53 to 55 he explains the nature of the jiva—namely, that the jiva, being a fractional part of Brahman, is conscious like Brahman but can never be equal to Brahman. Srila Jiva Gosvami explains that understanding this similarity between the jiva and Brahman is the initial step toward realizing the Absolute Truth. From TEXT 56 on he examines the subject matter of Srimad-Bhagavatam from another angle. Here he analyzes the Bhagavatam's ten topics, citing Sukadeva Gosvami's list in the Second Canto and Suta Gosvami's in the Twelfth. He shows that there is no clash of either spirit or content between these two great Bhagavatam authorities. In their descriptions of the first nine topics, both Sukadeva and Suta convey an understanding of the multifarious potencies and activities of the tenth topic, the shelter of all, Lord Sri Krsna. Thus from various angles Jiva Gosvami has established that Srimad- Bhagavatam is the ultimate scriptural authority and that it teaches the following: Sri Krsna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, devotional service is the process for attaining the supreme goal of life, and this supreme goal is unalloyed love of Godhead. In the next three Sandarbhas, Srila Jiva Gosvami will further elaborate on the sambandhi-tattva. HARI OM TAT SAT

Srila Jiva Gosvami's Sri Bhagavat-sandarbha An Essay on Bhagavan Volume One

Introduction The second sandarbha, called Bhagavat-sandarbha, draws a distinction between impersonal Brahman and localised Paramatma, and describes the spiritual world and the domination of the mode of goodness devoid of contamination by the other two material modes. In other words, there is a vivid description of the transcendental position known a suddha-sattva. Material goodness is apt to be contaminated by the other two material qualities - ignorance and passion - but when one is situated in the suddha-sattva-position, there is no chance for such contamination. It is a spiritual platform of pure goodness. The potency of the Supreme Lord, and the living entity, is also described, and there is a description of the inconceivable energies and varieties of energies of the Lord. The potencies of the Lord are divided into categories - internal, external, personal, marginal, and so forth. There are also discussions of the eternality of Deity worship, the omnipotence of the Deity, His all-pervasiveness, Hi giving shelter to everyone, His subtle and gross potencies, His personal manifestations, Hi expression of form, qualities, and pastimes, His transcendental position and His complete form. It is also stated that everything pertaining to the Absolute has the same potency and that the spiritual world, the associates in the spiritual world, and the threefold energies of the Lord in the spiritual world are all transcendental. There are further discussions concerning the difference between the impersonal Brahman and the Personality of Godhead, the fullness of the Personality of Godhead, the objective of all Vedic knowledge, the personal potencies of the Lord, and the Personality of Godhead as the original author of Vedic knowledge. Anuccheda 1

In the previous (Tattva) Sandarbha I have described in a general way the nature of the non-dual Absolute Truth and the eternal distinction between that Absolute and the individual living entities, who are naturally the servants and worshippers of the Absolute. Now I shall describe some of the variegated features of the Absolute. The Absolute is known in three features, called Brahman, Paramatma and Bhagavan. This is described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (1.2.11): "Learned transcendentalists who know the Absolute Truth call this non dual substance Brahman, Paramatma or Bhagavan."*

Anuccheda 2

1 In this and other verses of the Bhagavatam, and in other Vedic literatures as well, the Absolute Truth is indicated by the use of these three words. In some places the Absolute is called Brahman, in other places Paramatma, and in other places Bhagavan. In the description of Srila Vyasa's perception, in spiritual trance, of the Supreme (described in the Tattva Sandarbha), the individual living entities (jivas) are clearly described as different from the Supreme. For this reason no one should claim that the jivas are identical with the Supreme, and no one can artificially add the phrase "jiva iti ca sabdyate" (and the Supreme is also known as jiva) to this verse (1.2.11) of Srimad Bhagavatam. Although the Bhagavatam gives elaborate explanations of Brahman and Bhagavan first, and only after some while describes at length the feature of Paramatma, nevertheless this verse (1.2.11) gives the three features of the Supreme in the sequence Brahman, Paramatma, Bhagavan. This sequence shows the relative importance of the three features, the most important given last. 2 The non-dual Supreme, whose spiritual bliss is without interruption is understood in the three features of Brahman, Paramatma and Bhagavan. I shall now describe the feature called Brahman: Those transcendentalists who realise the Brahman feature of the Lord experience so much spiritual happiness by this realisation that they spit in contempt on the happiness attained by the demigod Brahma, what to speak of the little happiness available to the other insignificant creatures in the material world. By rigidly following the practices of spiritual life (sadhana), these transcendentalists are able to understand that the individual living entity is spiritual and his nature is like that of the Supreme. These persons however, remain unable to understand the variety of spiritual form and potencies in the transcendental world, and neither can they understand the difference between the potencies (sakti) and Supreme Lord who is the master of all potencies (saktiman). Their limited knowledge of the mutual spiritual nature of the individual living entities and the Supreme is known as the Brahman understanding of the Lord. 3 The Bhagavan feature of the Absolute Truth may be explained in the following way: The Supreme is in some ways different from His potencies, and He is the Supreme Shelter upon which all His transcendental potencies rest. The devotees directly perceive with their senses the personal form of the Lord everywhere, within and without everything, and in this way the devotees experience intense transcendental bliss. This realisation of the devotees, that the potencies (sakti) and the Supreme Lord who is the master of all potencies (saktiman) are different, is known as the Bhagavan understanding of the Lord. 4 These three features of the Supreme Lord are described in the same way in the following verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (5.12.11), where Jada Bharata says: "What, then, is the ultimate truth? The answer is that non dual knowledge is the ultimate truth. It is devoid of the contamination of material qualities. It gives us liberation. It is the one without a second, all-pervading and beyond imagination. The first realisation of that knowledge is Brahman. Then Paramatma, the Supersoul, is realised by the yogis who try to see Him without grievance. This is the second stage of realisation. Finally, full realisation of the same supreme knowledge is realised in the Supreme Person (Bhagavan). All learned scholars describe the Supreme Person as Vasudeva, the cause of Brahman, Paramatma and other."* 5 The same description is found in the following verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.11.30) where Manu says to Maharaja Dhruva: "Regaining your natural position and rendering service unto the Supreme Lord (Bhagavan), who is the all-powerful reservoir of all pleasure and who lives in all living entities as the Supersoul, you will very soon forget the illusory understanding of 'I' and 'my'."*

1 In this verse the word ‘bhagavan’ is modified by the adjectival compounds ‘ananda-matre’ (the reservoir of all pleasure) and ‘upapanna-amastra-saktau’ (the master of all potencies). When the Supreme completely reveals Himself He is known as Bhagavan, and in comparison to this the Brahman feature, where the transcendental form of the Lord is not manifested, is only a partial manifestation of the Supreme. This will be discussed in great detail later on in this book. Now let us consider the definition of the word ‘Bhagavan’ given in the following verses of Visnu Purana (6.5.66-69): 2 “The impersonal Brahman feature of the Supreme is unmanifested, free from old-age, inconceivable, birthless, free from decay and diminution, indescribable, formless, without hands, feet, or other limbs, all-powerful, all-pervading, eternal, the origin of all material element, without any cause, present in everything, although nothing is situated in it, the source of the material cosmos, the object of vision for the demigods, and the object of meditation for they who aspire after liberation. The impersonal Brahman I the supremely subtle spiritual effulgence and abode of Lord Visnu, which I described in the mantras of the Vedas. Brahman is the effulgence of the Bhagavan feature of the Lord, and the all-pervading Supersoul (Paramatma) I the partial manifestation of the transcendental form of the imperishable Supreme Person, Sri Bhagavan.” 3 The Visnu Purana further explains (5.6.73-75): “O sage, the word Bhagavan may be explained in the following way: the syllable ‘bha’ may be understood to mean ‘bharta’, or ‘sambharta’, the maintainer and nourisher of the devotees, and the syllable ‘ga’ may be understood to mean 'gamayita', the leader of the devotees, or the original creator of the good qualities present in the devotees. 4 "The word 'bhaga' also means 'opulences'. There are six opulences: wealth, strength, fame, beauty, knowledge, and renunciation. "Bhagavan" means the person who possesses all these opulences in full. 5 "In the word 'bhagavan', the syllable 'va' stands for the verb 'vas' to reside. Because all material elements and all living entities rest within the Supreme Lord, and because He is present in the heart of all conditioned souls, He is addressed by the syllable 'va'." 6 It is also said (Visnu Purana 6.5.79); "The Supreme Personality of Godhead possesses all strength, beauty, wealth, fame, knowledge, and renunciation, and therefore He is known as 'bhagavan'. He is free from all faults." 7 Now let us consider this description of Bhagavan from the Visnu Purana. In the first four verses (quoted in text 2), the word 'brahma' may be taken as an adjective ('great'), modifying 'visnoh paramam padam' (supreme nature of Lord Visnu). Interpreted in this way the words 'vibhum' (all-powerful) and 'sarva-gatam' (all-pervading) describe Lord Bhagavan's nature, which I full of all opulences (aisvaryasya samagrasya). The adjectives 'arupam' (formless) and 'pani-padady-asamyutam' (without hands, feet, or other limbs) should be understood to mean that the Supreme Lord Bhagavan has no material form, for His form is perfectly spiritual, and no material hands, feet, or other limbs, for His limbs are not made of matter. 8 In this passage the word 'vibhum' means 'full of all powers and opulences', 'vyapi' means 'all-pervading', and 'avyapyam' means 'nothing else can enter Him and be pervading within Him." The word 'bhagavan' directly indicates the Absolute Truth and is not in any way an indirect or incomplete description of Him. A certain river may be directly indicated by the name 'ganga', although this river is only indirectly indicated by the word 'riverbank'. In the same way the word 'bhagavan' directly indicates the absolute Truth and 'brahman' indirectly refers to the Absolute Truth. 9 The Nirukta dictionary begins it's list of definitions by announcing (1.2.1) "Now we shall give synonym for some difficult words'. In the same way we shall now explain some of the words quoted in the definition of the word Bhagavan. In that explanation the syllable 'bha' was described as standing for the word 'bharta'. "Bharta" means 'the nourisher, maintainer and establisher of the devotees." In the same way the syllable 'ga' stands for the word 'gamayita', which means "He who creates all kinds of auspicious qualities within His devotees', or "He who grants pure love of Godhead, which is the actual result of devotional service', or 'He who brings His devotees to His own transcendental planet'. The words 'bharta' and 'gamayita', should not be interpreted here to mean 'the creator and maintainer of the universe." In this context these words are used to express the relationship between the Supreme Lord and His devotees. This is the opinion of the disciplic succession of Vaisnava acaryas. 10 Synonyms for the next verse from the Visnu Purana (quoted in Text 4) follow: "Aisvarya" means "ability to control others", "samagra" means "in all respects", "virya" means "the potency of Vedic mantras chanted by great sages", "yasah" means "fame of good qualities in relation to body, mind and words", "Sri" means "all kinds of opulence and good fortune", "jnana" means "omniscience", "vairagya" means "non-attachment to material things", and 'ingana" means "name". 11 The word "bhagavan" may be understood to mean "He who possesses ('vat' is the affix known as 'matup'), the qualities previously described by the syllable 'bha', 'ga' and 'va' (bha+ga+van). The 'a' in the third quality (va), was elided, enabling the two v's to join and become a single letter. In this way the word "Bhagavavan" becomes Bhagavan). "Bhagavan" is therefore the possessor of 'bha', 'ga' and 'va'. 12 In the next verse (Text 6) the six opulences possessed by Bhagavan are also described. In this verse the word 'jnana' means 'knowledge', which is the domain of the mind and intelligence, 'sakti' mean 'the power of the senses', 'balam' means 'the strength of the body', 'tejah' means 'beauty', and 'asesatah' means 'completely' ('aisvarya' and 'virya' have been described in the previous texts). The possessor of all these in full ('van') is known as Bhagavan. The Supreme is manifest in three features: Brahman, Paramatma, and Bhagavan (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.2.11). The Bhagavan feature is the complete manifestation of the Supreme, and the other two are partial revelations of the actual nature of the Supreme.

1 The nature of Brahman and Bhagavan are revealed in the following question posed by Maharaja Nimi, and it's answer by Pippalayana Muni (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.3.34 and 35): "King Nimi inquired: Please explain to me the transcendental situation of the Supreme Lord, Narayana, who is Himself the Absolute Truth and the Supersoul of everyone. You can explain this to me, because you are all most expert in transcendental knowledge." 2 "Sri Pippalayana aid: The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the cause of the creation, maintenance and destruction of this universe, yet He has no prior cause. He pervades the various states of wakefulness, dreaming and unconscious deep sleep and also exists beyond them. By entering the body of every living being as the Supersoul, He enlivens the body, senses, life airs and mental activities and thus all the subtle and gross organ of the body begin their functions. My dear King, know that Personality of Godhead to be the Supreme." 3 Maharaja Nimi's question may be explained in the following way: The word 'narayanabhidhanasya' means 'of Bhagavan, who is known as Narayana' and 'nistha' means 'the transcendental situation'. The Lord's features as Brahman and Paramatma as mentioned in this verse are His appearance specifically within the material world. He appears as Bhagavan in the spiritual world, and His appearance as Brahman and Paramatma is limited, for the most part, to the material world. This is confirmed in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (11.15.16): "Narayana, who is known as Bhagavan, appears in the spiritual world (turiya), unlike other manifestations of the Lord that appear in the material world." 4 In this verse (11.3.35), in answer to King Nimi's question, Pippalayana Muni speaks verse 11.3.35. He says there that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the 'cause of the creation, maintenance and destruction of this universe (sthiti-adi-hetu) and He has no prior cause (ahetu). He enters the body of the living entity as the Supersoul and enlivens the body, senses, life-airs, and mental activities, and thus all the subtle and gross organs of the body begin their functions (dehendriyasu-hrdayani caranti yena sanjivitani). In his answer Pippalayana says: Please know that Personality of Godhead, who appears in the form of Narayana and other forms, to be the Supreme (avehi param). This explanations clearly describes the Bhagavan feature of the Supreme, for the Brahman feature has a different description. The three features of the Supreme (Brahman, Paramatma and Bhagavan) have different names and they appear in different ways to their worshippers. Each is distinct from the others. Brahman is different from Paramatma and Paramatma is different from Bhagavan. Pippalayana Muni answered the question of King Nimi by describing the Bhagavan feature of the Supreme. 5 The word 'ahetu' may also be interpreted to mean 'Because the Supreme Lord in His Bhagavan feature always remains in the spiritual world with His transcendental pastime potency, He remains aloof from the activities of material creation.' Bhagavan appears in the form of His partial expansion, Paramatma, who then creates the forms of the conditioned souls (who are the Lord's parts and parcels) and the material energies. It is the Paramatma who 'enters the body of every living entity, and enlivens the body, senses, life-airs and mental activities.' The phrase 'avehi param' may then be interpreted to mean 'Please know that this is the Paramatma feature of the Supreme.' 6 The three features of the Supreme are mentioned by Varunadeva in the following prayer to Sri Krsna (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.28.7): "I offer my respectful obeisances to the Supreme Lord, who appears in three features as Bhagavan, Paramatma, and Brahman." In commenting on this verse, Sridhara Svami said: "The word 'paramatmane' in this verse means 'the controller of living entities.'" The Paramatma feature of the Lord is then the constant companion of the conditioned souls, but He I always their superior, and therefore He is called 'paramatma', or 'the Supreme Soul'. In the verse from the Eleventh Canto (11.3.35) the Brahman feature of the Supreme is described in the following words: "He pervades the various states of wakefulness, dreaming and unconscious deep sleep, and also exists beyond them." The word 'ca' (and) is significant in this verse, for it distinguishes Brahman from the individual living entities ("There are the individual living entities and there is also the Brahman"). In these ways in this verse (11.3.35) it is said: "Please understand the Bhagavan, Paramatma and Brahman features of the Supreme Lord." This verse was spoken by Sri Narada Muni.

1 The following three verses of Srimad Bhagavatam (11.15.15-17) describe the three features of the Absolute (Brahman, Paramatma and Bhagavan) in connection with the description of the attainment of mystic yoga powers. The Bhagavatam explains: “One who concentrates his consciousness in Visnu, the Supersoul, the prime mover and Supreme Lord of the external energy consisting of the three modes, obtains the mystic perfection of controlling other condition souls, their material bodies and bodily designations. 2 “The yogi who places his mind in My form of Narayana, known as the fourth factor, full of all opulences, becomes endowed with My nature and thus obtains the mystic perfection called vasita.” 3 “One who fixes the pure mind in Me in My manifestation as the impersonal Brahman obtains the greatest happiness, wherein all of his desires are completely fulfilled.” 4 Sridhara Svami explains these verses in the following way: “Of these three verses the first (quoted in Text 7) describes the Paramatma feature of the Lord. In that verse the word “try-adhisvare’ means ‘the supreme controller of maya”, which consist of three modes of nature’, and the word ‘kala-vigrahe’ means ‘the Supersoul who perceives everything'. "The second of these verses (quoted in Text 8) describes the Bhagavan feature of the Lord. In this verse Bhagavan I described as 'turiyakhye' (He who is known as the fourth factor). The meaning of this word is given in the following statement of Vedic literature: "Within the material world the Supreme Lord appears in three forms Karanodakasayi Visnu, Garbhodakasayi Visnu, and Ksirodakasayi Visnu. The original form of the Lord is different from these three forms, and therefore He is known as turiya, the fourth form of the Lord." "This compound word 'bhagavac-chabda-sabdite' is explained in the following statement of Visnu Purana (6.5.74): 'There are six opulences: wealth, strength, fame, beauty, knowledge and renunciation. Bhagavan means the person who possesses all these opulences in full."

1 The view held by some that Impersonal Brahman is the ultimate feature of the Supreme will be discussed in the Third (Paramatma) Sandarbha. In that Sandarbha we will quote the following verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.6) which the impersonalists repeat to substantiate their position: 2 “O unlimited Lord, only persons who have cleansed their hearts of contamination are able to understand the glories of Your transcendental form. Because You do not undergo any material transformation, because You have no material form and because You are self-manifest, unless You choose to reveal Yourself to someone, there is no other means to understand You.” 3 This verse should be understood in the following way: “O Lord (bhuman), although it is very difficult to understand whether Your ultimate feature is Brahman or Bhagavan, nevertheless (tathapi), it is clear that the unlimited qualities of Your own transcendental form are now hidden (agunasya).” The word ‘mahima’ in this verse means ‘greatness’. We may note in this connection that the word ‘Brahman’ means ‘the great’. This is confirmed in the following statement of the Sruti-sastra: “What is the meaning of the word Brahman? Brahman means He whose greatness is expanded without limit (brmhati), or He who causes His devotees to become great (brmhayati).” 4 In this verse Brahma says: “O Lord, only persons who have cleansed their hearts of contamination (amalantaratmabhih) are able to understand (vibodhum arhati) Your glories (mahima).” One may ask: Why are only the pure-hearted able to understand the Lord? To this question the answer is given: “O Lord, because You are self-manifest (svanubhavat), unless You choose to reveal Yourself to someone, there is no other means to understand You.” 5 At this point someone may object: “According to our perception all gross and subtle bodies are subject to various kinds of material transformations (such as birth, growth, old-age, and death). For this reason we may assume that the form of Sri Krsna is also subject to these material transformation.” In order to answer this objection, Brahma uses the word ‘avikriyat’, which means ‘because Your form does not undergo any material transformations.” 6 At this point someone may raise the following objection: “All forms which we have perceived are material in nature, and therefore we consider that the form of Sri Krsna, which is perceivable by the senses, must also be material.” In order to answer this objection, Brahma uses the word ‘arupatah’ (the form of Sri Krsna is not material). 7 At this point Lord Krsna may pose the following question to Brahma: “How can My transcendental form become manifest before the living entities?” In order to answer this question, Brahma says: “ananya-bodhyatmataya (You can be understood only by devotional service).” Although no one has, by his own merit, the ability to understand Krsna, if one worships Him by Performing devotional service, the Lord voluntarily appears before that devotee. This is described in the following verse from Srimad Bhagavatam (1.2.12 the verse immediately following the description of Brahman, Paramatma and Bhagavan) where Suta Gosvami says: 8 “The seriously inquisitive student or sage, well equipped with knowledge and detachment, realises that Absolute Truth by rendering devotional service in terms of what he has heard from the Vedanta-sruti.”* 9 This is also confirmed in the following verse from Srimad Bhagavatam (8.24.38) where Lord Matsya instructs Maharaja Satyavrata in the following word: “You will be thoroughly advised and favoured by Me, and because of your inquiries, everything about My glories, which are known as param brahma, will be manifest within your heart. Thus you will know everything about Me."*

1 The three aspects of Brahman, Paramatma and Bhagavan are also described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (2.7.47): "What I realised as the Absolute Brahman I full of unlimited bliss without grief. That I certainly the ultimate phase of the supreme enjoyer, the Personality of Godhead (Bhagavan). He is eternally void of all disturbances and fearless. He I complete consciousness as opposed to matter. Uncontaminated and without distinctions, He is the primeval cause (Paramatma) of all causes and effects, in whom there is no sacrifice for fruitive activities and in whom the illusory energy does not stand."* 2 Because the Absolute Truth I the greatest (brttama) He is known as Brahman (brahmeti yad viduh). Brahman and Bhagavan both refer to the same Supreme Truth (paramasya pumso bhagavatah padam), and therefore they are not different from each other. Bhagavan is, however, the original feature of the Supreme and Brahman is manifested at a later time from the form of Bhagavan, who I the reservoir in whom the Brahman and other features of the Supreme remain. 3 In this verse the Impersonal Brahma is described by the words 'pratibodha-matram' (complete consciousness, as opposed to matter), and 'ajasra-sukham' (unlimited bliss). The word

‘atma-tattvam’ indicates that the Supreme Truth is the original root from whom all individual spirit souls have become manifested. Because the Supreme is the original father of all spirit souls, He loves them all equally without discrimination. 4 The Absolute Truth is full of unlimited bliss because He is ‘sasvat’ (eternal), ‘prasantam’ (free from all disturbances), ‘abhayam’ (without fear), and ‘visokam’ (without grief). The Supreme does not need to perform pious activities in order to reap happiness as a result. This is confirmed in the following words: “The Supreme does not perform sacrifices in order to reap material benefits. This means that the fruitive sacrifices described in the karma-khanda section of the Vedas will not help one to understand the Absolute truth. Only the philosophical portions of the Vedas, such as the Upanisads, will help one to understand the Supreme. This is confirmed in the following statement of the Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad (3.9.26): “The Supreme Person is revealed in the Upanisads. 5 That the Lord’s transcendental bliss I not dependent on the interaction of senses with sense-objects is confirmed by the following words used in this verse to describe the Lord: ‘suddham’ (the Lord is uncontaminated), ‘saman’ (without distinction) and ‘sad-asatah param’ (and beyond the interactions of material causes and effects). The phrase ‘maya paraity abhimukhe ca vilajjamana’ means ‘The illusory energy maya is ashamed to come before the Lord of His devotees. She flees far away from them.”

1 When the truth of the Lord's original feature, known a Bhagavan, becomes manifested, then the truth of the Impersonal Brahman feature automatically becomes manifested also. For this reason this explanation of Brahman has been included in this essay, which explains the nature of Bhagavan. 2 The proper method of understanding the Bhagavan feature of the Supreme is described in the following verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (1.7.4) where Suta Gosvami says: "Thus he fixed his mind, perfectly engaging it by linking it in devotional service (bhakti-yoga) without any tinge of materialism, and thus he saw the Absolute Personality of Godhead along with His external energy, which was under full control."*

That the Bhagavan feature of the Supreme may be understood only by devotional service is also confirmed in the following statement of Srimad-Bhagavatam (3.9.11) where Brahma says: "O my Lord, Your devotees can see You through the ears by the process of bona fide hearing, and thus their hearts become cleansed, and You take Your seat there. You are so merciful to Your devotees that You manifest Yourself in the particular eternal form of transcendence in which they always think of You."* This verse was recounted by Srila Suta Gosvami.

1 The Bhagavan feature of the Lord is described in the following ten and a half verses of Srimad Bhagavatam (2.9.9-19) where Sukadeva Gosvami says: "The Personality of Godhead, being thus very much satisfied with the penance of Lord Brahma was pleased to manifest His personal abode, Vaikuntha, the supreme planet above all others. This transcendental abode of the Lord is adored by all self-realised persons freed from all kinds of miseries and fear of illusory existence.* 2 “In that personal abode of the Lord, the material modes of ignorance and passion do not prevail, nor is there any of their influence in goodness. There is no predominance of the influence of time, so what to speak of the illusory, external energy; it cannot enter that region. Without discrimination, both the demigods and the demons worship the Lord as devotees.* 3 “The inhabitants of Vaikuntha planets are described as having a glowing sky-bluish complexion. Their eyes resemble lotus flowers, their dress is of yellowish colour, and their bodily features very attractive. They are just the age of growing youths, they all have four hands, they are all nicely decorated with pearl necklaces with ornamental medallions, and they all appear to be effulgent.* 4 “Some of them are effulgent like coral and diamonds in complexion and have garlands on their heads, blooming like lotus flowers, and some wear earrings. 5 “The Vaikuntha planets are also surrounded by various airplanes, all glowing and brilliantly situated. These airplanes belong to the great mahatmas or devotees of the Lord. The ladies are as beautiful as lightning because of their celestial complexions, and all these combined together appear just like the sky decorated with both clouds and lightning.* 6 “The goddess of fortune in her transcendental form is engaged in the loving service of the Lord’s lotus feet, and being moved by the black bees, followers of spring, she is not only being engaged in variegated pleasure-service to the Lord, along with her constant companions - but is also engaged in singing the glories of the Lord’s activities.* 7 “Lord Brahma saw in the Vaikuntha planets the Personality of Godhead, who is the Lord of the entire devotee community, the Lord of the Goddess of fortune, the Lord of all sacrifices, and the Lord of the universe, and who is served by the foremost servitors like Nanda, Sunanda, Prabala and Arhana, His immediate associates.* 8 “The Personality of Godhead, seen leaning favourably towards His loving servitors, His very sight intoxicating and attractive, appeared to be very much satisfied. He had a smiling face decorated with an enchanting reddish hue. He was dressed in yellow robes and wore earrings and a helmet on His head. He had four hands, and His chest was marked with the lines of the goddess of fortune.* 9 “The Lord was seated on His throne and was surrounded by different energies like the four, the sixteen, the five, and the six natural opulences, along with other insignificant energies of the temporary character. But He was the factual Supreme Lord, enjoying His own abode.* 10 “Lord Brahma, thus seeing the Personality of Godhead in His fullness, was overwhelmed with joy within his heart, and thus in full transcendental love and ecstasy, his eyes filled with tears of love. He thus bowed down before the Lord. That is the way of the highest perfection for the living being (paramahamsa).* 11 “And seeing Brahma present before Him, the Lord accepted him as worthy to create living beings, to be controlled as He desired, and thus being much satisfied with him, the Lord shook hands with Brahma and, smiling, addressed him thus.”* 12 The first of these verses (2.9.9 quoted in Text 1) should be interpreted in the following way: Brahma stayed in the lotus flower of the navel of the Purusa-avatara named Narayana, and there he worshipped the Lord by performing austerities for His satisfaction, as the Lord Himself had previously ordered. The Supreme Lord became pleased with Brahma (sabhajita), and showed him His own (sva-lokam) Vaikuntha realm, the topmost of all planetary systems. In this verse the word 'yat-param' may be interpreted to mean "The highest of all Vaikuntha planets: the abode of the original form of the Personality of Godhead", or it may also be interpreted to mean 'the Vaikuntha realm which is not different from the Supreme Truth, Brahman Himself." This Vaikuntha realm is described in these verses as full of transcendental varieties and free from the influence of the illusory potency, maya. 13 In this verse (2.9.9) the Vaikuntha realm was revealed to Brahma. Vaikuntha is described here as free from all miseries and fears (vyapeta-sanklesa-vimoha-saddhvasam). According to Patanjali's Yoga-sutras (Sadhana-pada, Sutra 3), the five miseries of material existence are: 1. Ignorance, 2. False-ego, 3. Lust, 4. Hatred, and 5. Attachment. Vaikuntha is free from these and all other sufferings. Self-realised souls are able to see Vaikuntha (sva-drstavadbhih), and they always worship and glorify it (abhistutam). 14 That self-realised souls are able to see Vaikuntha is confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (3.16.27-28) which describes the Four Kumaras' visit to Vaikunthaloka: "Lord Brahma said: After seeing the Lord of Vaikuntha, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, in the self-illuminated Vaikuntha planet, the sages left that transcendental abode.* 15 "The sages circumambulated the Supreme Lord, offered their obeisances and returned, extremely delighted at learning of the divine opulence of the Vaisnava."* 16 In the next verse (2.9.10) we read that "In the personal abode of the Lord the material modes of ignorance and passion do not prevail, nor is there any of their influence in goodness." The material mode of goodness, which is invariably mixed with the lower mode of passion and ignorance, does not exist in Vaikunthaloka. Only the spiritual mode of goodness, known as 'suddha-sattva', which is completely free from the touch of the illusory energy, maya, exists in the spiritual realm of Vaikuntha. 17 That the three modes of material nature are not present in the Vaikuntha planets is described in the following verse from the Jitanta-stotra of the Narada-pancaratra: "The planets known as Vaikuntha are filled with all six spiritual opulences. The three modes of material nature are not present on these planets, which cannot be entered by they who are not devotees of the Lord." 18 In the description of Vaikunthaloka found in the Padma Purana Uttara-khanda, the mode of goodness present in the spiritual world is clearly described as being non-material. In this passage, after describing the opulences and powers of the material potency, Lord Siva explains (Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda 255.56.59): 19 "My dear Parvati, you have just heard about the opulences of the material energy, now hear about the supreme opulences of the spiritual world, which comprises three quarters of all existence. 20 "Produced from the perspiration of the Personality of Godhead, whose limbs are all the Vedic literatures, the auspicious Viraja River flows on the boundary that separates the material energy from the spiritual sky. 21 “On the farther shore of the Viraja River is the spiritual sky. In that spiritual sky I the abode of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. That abode is eternal, imperishable, unlimited, effulgent, transcendental, and full of nectar. That abode is made of the transcendental energy known as the mode of pure goodness (suddha-sattva).” 22 The three modes of material nature never exist alone. If one of the modes is present, then the other two are also present. This I confirmed in the following statements of Vedic literature: “The three modes of material nature are present together.” Sankhya-kaumudi “The three modes of material nature are present together. They do not remain alone. If one is present, then the others are also present.” Bhattika “Wherever one mode of material nature is present, the other modes are also there. The mode of goodness, therefore, does not exist alone, but is always mixed with passion and ignorance. In the same way the other modes of nature cannot be manifested alone. They are always mixed with the other modes.” Agama-sastra “The three modes of material nature are always together, they cannot be separated from each other.” Vedic literature 23 Because in the Vaikuntha planets there is no mode of material passion, nothing is created there; because there is no mode of material ignorance, nothing is destroyed there; and because there is no mode of material goodness, nothing is material there, but everything is spiritual, eternal, full of knowledge and bliss. This verse (2.9.10) gives the reason for the absence of the three modes of material nature within the realm of Vaikuntha by saying: “There is no predominance of the influence of time.”* The time element agitates the material energy, and from that agitation the three modes of nature are born. Because in Vaikuntha there is no material time, which is the cause of the six varieties of material transformation, there are also no three modes of material nature. 24 In this verse (2.9.10) the phrase ‘na yatra maya’ (There is no predominance of the external, illusory energy) is like an axe that cuts at the root of any conception that material time or the modes of material nature have any influence in the Vaikuntha world. In this verse the word ‘maya’ does not only mean ‘illusion’, but it refers to a specific potency of the Personality of Godhead entrusted with the creation, maintenance and dissolution of the material universes. Because maya is absent in Vaikuntha, the modes of passion and ignorance, as well as material goodness, which is invariably contaminated by the lower modes of passion and ignorance, are also absent. In this verse the word ‘misram’ may also be interpreted to mean ‘pradhana’, or the unmanifested stage of the modes of nature, where the modes are not yet differentiated, but are merged together as a single unit. Interpreted in this way it may be understood that even at the beginning of the creation maya and pradhana were two distinct potencies of the Lord and were not identical. Because even at the beginning of material creation pradhana was different from maya, it may be understood that pradhana is always independent of both maya and time. It is a separate, independent potency. The phrase

'kim utapare' (what to speak of) reinforces the statement of this verse, that in Vaikunthaloka there is no influence of the material energy. There is no need to belabour this point, but it is sufficient to state, in a general way, that in Vaikunthaloka there is no influence of the mode of passion and ignorance. 25 At this point someone may object: "Is it not so that because in Vaikuntha there is no influence of the three modes of material nature, which are the origin of varieties, it may be logically concluded that there is no variety in Vaikunthaloka?" Considering that someone might raise this objection, Sukadeva Gosvami describes the varieties present in the Lord' transcendental potency known as suddha-sattva, which prevails in the Vaikuntha planets. This description begins with the word 'hareh' in verse 2.9.10 (quoted in Text 2). 26 In this verse the word 'sura' means 'those influenced by the mode of material goodness', and 'asura' means 'those influenced by the baser modes of passion and ignorance'. In Vaikuntha both these classes of living entities worship the Lord. In fact, however, because the residents of Vaikuntha constantly worship the Lord they are most exalted and are beyond all the modes of material nature. They are actually above the status of either demon or demigod. 27 Sukadeva Gosvami describes the residents of Vaikunthaloka in the following words (2.9.11): The inhabitants of the Vaikuntha planets are described as having a glowing sky-bluish complexion (syamavadatah). Their eyes resemble lotus flowers (sata-patra-locanah), their dress is of yellowish colour (pisanga-vastra), and their bodily features very attractive (surucah). They are just the age of growing youths (supesasah), they are all nicely decorated with pearl necklaces (mani-praveka) and with ornamental medallions (niskabharanah) and they all appear to be effulgent (suvarcasah). Many of the Vaikuntha residents have a bluish complexion like that of the Lord, but some have a different complexion and they are described in the following words (2.9.12): "Some of them are effulgent like coral and diamonds in complexion." 28 In the next verses (2.9.13-15), Sukadeva Gosvami, after describing the residents of Vaikuntha, continues his description of the Vaikuntha planets. Synonyms for some of the words in these verses follow: "rih" means 'the goddess of fortune, who is the transcendental potency of the Lord', 'rupini' means 'in the form of the most dear consort of the Lord', 'manam' means 'respectful services', 'vibhutibhih' means 'accompanied by her personal associates', 'prenkham' means 'movement of enjoyment', 'srita' means 'engaging in transcendental pastimes', 'kusumakarah' means 'spring', 'kusumakaranuga' means 'the bumble bees, who are followers of spring', 'giyamana' means 'being glorified in various ways', and 'priya-karma' means 'the activities of the dearmost Lord Hari." 29 The Personality of Godhead is also described as the master of the heroes in the Yadava dynasty. This is confirmed in the following verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (2.4.19), where Srila Sukadeva Gosvami says: "May Lord Sri Krsna, who is the worshipable Lord of all devotees, the protector and glory of all the kings like Andhaka and Vrsni of the Yadu dynasty, the husband of all goddesses of fortune, the director of all sacrifices and therefore the leader of all living entities, the controller of all intelligence, the proprietor of all planets, spiritual and material, and the supreme incarnation on the earth (the supreme all in all), be merciful upon me."* 30 In the next verse (2.9.16 quoted in text 8), Sukadeva Gosvami says that the very sight of the Lord is 'intoxicating and attractive', and 'His chest is marked with the lines of the goddess of fortune.' The goddess of fortune remains as a golden line on the left side of the Lord's chest. In the next verse (2.9.17, quoted in Text 9), the four potencies mentioned may be interpreted to refer to the four spiritual potencies beginning with the potency of religious piety. The four potencies clearly does not refer to irreligion or any similar external, material energies. These spiritual potencies in the spiritual realm are described in the following statement of the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda (91.100): 31 "In the spiritual world the Rg, Yajur, Sama and Atharva Vedas, as well as the four potencies: piety, knowledge, opulence, and renunciation, eternally remain." We may note that the use of the word 'tatha' in this verse in the middle of samasa is not a grammatical flaw, for this verse is spoken by Srila Vyasadeva Himself. 32 The sixteen potencies mentioned in this verse (2.9.17 quoted in Text 9) are the sixteen doorkeepers of Vaikuntha, who are described in the following statement of Padma Purana Uttara-khanda (256.14-17), where Lord Siva says to Parvati: "O beautiful-faced Parvati, Canda and Pracanda are the guards posted at the eastern gate of Vaikuntha. Bhadra and Subhadraka guard the southern gate, Jaya and Vijaya remain at the western gate, and Dhata and Vidhata protect the northern gate. In addition to them Kumuda and Kumudaksa guard the southeast, Pundarika and Vamana guard the southwest, Sankukarna and Sarvanetra guard the northeast. These are the names of the sixteen protectors of Vaikuntha-puri." 33 The five potencies mentioned in this verse (2.9.17 quoted in Text 9) are named in the following verse from the Padma Purana Uttara khanda (256-24): "Kurma, Nagaraja, Vainateya the master of the Vedas, Chandah and Sarvamantra are the five potencies that comprise the form of the spiritual realm." 34 Later, in the Krsna-sandarbha, we will describe the personal abode of Sri Krsna, which is situated in the highest part of the Vaikuntha realm. In that realm of Sri Krsna there are also sixteen transcendental potencies, and their names beginning with Cyuta and Alambini will be given in a passage from the Prabhasa-khanda quoted in the Krsna-sandarbha. 35 In this verse (2.9.17 quoted in text 9) the word 'svaih' means 'personal', 'bhagaih' means 'with various opulences and potencies', and 'yuktam' means 'empowered'. 'Itaratra' means 'among the mystic-yogis', and 'adhruvaih' means 'temporary'. In other words, the mystic yogis attain opulences that are a faint reflection of those the Lord manifests in the spiritual world. The word 've' means 'own', and 'dhaman' means 'in the Lord's abode of Vaikuntha'. Because Lord Narayana is supremely independent and because He engages only in enjoying various pastimes (ramamanam) in the Vaikuntha world, therefore He should be understood to be the Personality of Godhead (isvaram). He is not an ordinary living entity. 36 The next verse (2.9.18 quoted in text 10) says: 'bowing before the Lord's lotus feet is the way of highest perfection for the living being.' This statement confirms that the form of the Lord is not material, but purely spiritual, eternal, full of knowledge and full of bliss. 37 In the next verse (2.9.19 quoted in text 11), Sukadeva Gosvami says the Supreme Lord 'accepted Brahma as worthy to create living beings, to be controlled as He desired (praja-visarge nija-sasanarhanam), and thus the Lord spoke to him as follow (babhase).' 38 At this point someone may raise the following objection: "Brahma is merely the creator of the material universes, and is very insignificant in comparison to the Personality of Godhead, the greatest of the great. I do not think it is possible for Brahma to have a direct relationship with the Supreme Lord." In order to answer this question, Srila Sukadeva Gosvami described the Supreme Lord's intense love for His devotees in the next verse (2.9.19 quoted in text 11) by saying: "The Lord was very much satisfied with Brahma, shook hands with him, and, slightly smiling, addressed him thus."*

The Bhagavan, or personal, feature of the Supreme Spirit is not an artificial creation sprung from the imagination of some theologicians and philosophers, but it is the actual truth. This personal aspect of the Supreme Truth, who is always accompanied by His various potencies, is the subject matter described in the verses of Srimad Bhagavatam, and in the very beginning of the Bhagavatam, Srila Vyasadeva stresses the reality of this subject matter (the Supreme Person) by saying (1.1.2): “This Bhagavata Purana propounds the highest truth which is understandable by those devotees who are fully pure in heart. The highest truth is reality distinguished from illusion for the welfare of all. Such truth uproots the threefold miseries.”* In this verse the Supreme Truth is described by the two adjectives ‘sivadam’ and ‘trayonmulanam’. “Sivadam’ means ‘He who give transcendental bliss by the means of His own transcendental potency’, and ‘tapa-trayonmulanam’ means ‘He who uproots the threefold miseries caused by the illusory potency, maya.’

The potencies of the Lord may be divided into two opposite kinds: 1. The internal, or spiritual potency, and 2. The external, or material potency, maya. These two potencies inspire their followers to think and act in diverse ways, and in this way there are innumerable different activities and innumerable different philosophies, each hostile to the others. Nevertheless all this variety has a single origin. That single origin is described by Maharaja Daksa in the following prayer (Srimad Bhagavatam 6.4.31) addressed to the Supreme Personality of Godhead: “Let me offer my respectful obeisances unto the all-pervading Supreme Personality of godhead, who possesses unlimited transcendental qualities. Acting from within the cores of the hearts of all philosophers, who propagate various views, He causes them to forget their own souls while sometimes agreeing and sometimes disagreeing among themselves. Thus He creates within this material world a situation in which they are unable to come to a conclusion. I offer my obeisances unto Him.

That all variegated potencies have their origin in the Supreme Personality of Godhead is also confirmed in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (4.9.16) where Dhruva Maharaja says to the Supreme Lord: “My dear Lord, in Your impersonal manifestation of Brahman there are always two opposing elements - knowledge and ignorance. Your multi-energies are continually manifest, but the impersonal Brahman, which is undivided, original, changeless, unlimited and blissful, is the cause of the material manifestation. Because You are the same impersonal Brahman, I offer my respectful obeisances unto You.”* The multi-energies of the Lord may be divided into three broad categories: the superior, intermediate, and inferior potencies. Inspired by these variegated energies of the Lord, the living entities act in various ways.

That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the origin and reservoir of all potencies is also confirmed in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (4.17.33), where Maitreya Muni says to Vidura: “My dear Lord, by Your own potencies You are the original cause of the material elements, as well as the performing instruments (the senses), the workers of the senses (the controlling demigods), the intelligence and the ego, as well as everything else. By Your energy You manifest this entire cosmic creation, maintain it and dissolve it. Through Your energy alone everything is sometimes manifest and sometimes not manifest. You are therefore the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the cause of all causes. I offer my respectful obeisances unto You.”*

That the Lord's variegated potencies are inconceivable and cannot be completely understood by the individual living entity is confirmed by the following statements of Vedic literature: "O Lord, You are the Supreme Personality of Godhead for all living entities. Your diverse energies can act multifariously. This is inconceivable to us."* Devahuti-devi to Lord Kapila (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.33.3) "The Absolute Truth and His potencies are inconceivable. They can only be understood by the Vedic literatures, which are the direct revelation of the Lord." Anuccheda 16

1 The nature of the Lord’s potencies is further described in the following verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (11.3.37) where Pippalayana Rsi says to Maharaja Nimi: “Originally one, the Absolute, Brahman, comes to be known a threefold, manifesting itself as the three modes of material nature: goodness, passion and ignorance. Brahman further expands it potency, and thus the power to act and the power of consciousness becomes manifest, along with the false ego, which covers the identity of the conditioned living being. Thus, by the expansion of the multi-potencies of the Absolute, the demigods, as the embodiment of knowledge, become manifest, along with the material senses, their objects, and the results of material activity, namely happiness and distress. In this way the manifestation of the material world takes place as the subtle cause and as the material effect visible in the appearance of gross material objects. Brahman, which is the source of all subtle and gross manifestations, is simultaneously transcendental to them, being absolute." 2 In this verse the phrase 'brahmaiva uru-sakti bhati' means 'The Supreme Truth possesses many potencies'. The word 'eva' (certainly) emphasises the fact that Lord's potencies are not merely imagined to exist, but are real, the potencies naturally possessed by the Lord. In the last line of this verse 'yat' refers to Brahman, 'sat' to earth and the other gross material elements, 'asat'' to prakrti and the other subtle material elements, 'tayoh' to these two external potencies, and 'param' to the Lord's personal internal potency, which is the spiritual planets of Vaikuntha, and the pure spirit souls, who are His marginal potencies. Any conception that contradicts this is in error. 3 Someone may ask: "What different kinds of potencies are the property of the Lord?" In order to answer this question, Pippalayana Muni said: 'jnana-kriyartha-phala-rupataya'. This means that the Lord has many potencies, such as His jnana-sakti, which consists of the mahat-tattva and other potencies, kriya-sakti, which consists of the sutras and other potencies, and artha-sakti, which consists of the tan-matras and other potencies. These sat and asat potencies are material in nature. Above them (tayoh param) is the supreme goal of life, the spiritual Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is known as Bhagavan and who is accompanied by His potencies. Also above them is the spiritual living entity, who is known as jiva, and who, because He follows the Lord, is pure. In this way the Lord's many potencies (uru-sakti), which begin with His jnana-sakti and kriya-sakti are described. 4 The Lord's potencies are real, not imagined, for they have emanated from the Lord Himself, the Supreme Reality. This is confirmed by Pippalayana Muni in the following statement: "Originally one, the Absolute, Brahman, comes to be known as threefold, manifesting itself as the three modes of material nature: goodness, passion and ignorance. In this way Brahman expands its potency." From the Supreme Brahman the unmanifested modes of material nature (tri-vrt) are manifested; from the unmanifested mode of nature the kriya-sakti is manifested, from the kriya-sakti the sutram is manifested. From jnana-sakti the power of consciousness is manifested and from the power of consciousness the false-ego (aham) is manifested. The false ego covers the awareness of the pure individual soul (jivam) which is one of the Lord's spiritual potencies. The Vedic literatures explain (pravadanti) the manifestation of the Lord's potencies in this way. That all these variegated energies have emanated from the Supreme Godhead is explained in the Chandogya Upanisad (6.2.1) in the following words: "O gentle student, in the beginning, before the creation, only the Supreme Godhead was manifest. It is from Him that everything has come." Because the variegated potencies have emanated from the Supreme Truth, they must also be real, they cannot be false. All these potencies are like the limbs and parts of the limbs of the Personality of Godhead. He is like the sun, and all these potencies are like the rays of light emanating from that Supreme-sun. This is confirmed by the following statement of Sruti-sastra (found in the following places: Katha Upanisad 2.2.15, Mundaka Upanisad 2.2.10, and Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.14): "Everything that exists is like rays of light emanating from the Supreme." 5 That the Lord's potencies are real, and also inconceivable to the living entities, is confirmed by the following question posed by Maitreya Muni, and answered by Parasara Muni. Maitreya asked (Visnu Purana 1.3.2): "The Personality of Godhead is supremely pure in heart and mind, and He is beyond the influence of the three modes of material nature. He is unlimited. How is it possible for Him to directly engage in the creation, maintenance and destruction of the various material universes? I would expect that He would have no direct connection at all with the material world." 6 Parasara Muni answered Maitreya's question in the following words (Visnu Purana 1.3.3): "O best of the ascetics, the potencies of the Supreme Personality of Godhead (such as sarga-sakti, the potency of material creation, and others) are all inconceivable and cannot be understood by the individual living entities. Just as heat is the potency of fire, these are all the potencies of the Supreme." 7 Sridhara Svami comments on this verse in the following words: "In this verse Maitreya Muni doubts that it is possible for the transcendental Personality of Godhead to engage in the mundane activity of material creation. The word 'nirgunasya' used in this verse means 'free from the influence of the material modes of goodness, passion and ignorance'. "Aprameyasya' means 'free from the limitations of time, space, and other material restricting factors'. 'Suddhasya' means 'without a material body', or 'He who does not require anyone's help in order to do anything'. 'Amalatmanah' means 'He who is free from material piety and impiety, and who does not have to perform any Vedic ritual in order to become purified.' Observing that the Supreme is different from, and untouched by, matter, Maitreya Muni doubts that it is possible for Him to create something so different from Himself. 8 "In the next verse and a half, Parasara Muni answers Maitreya's question by saying that the Personality of Godhead acts within the material world through the agency of His inconceivable potencies. The Lord's potencies may be considered inconceivable in two ways. First, they are inconceivable because they are so great and powerful that the tiny logical apparatus of the conditioned soul does not have the strength to understand them, and second, they are inconceivable because they are simultaneously one and different from the Personality of Godhead, a seeming contradiction which the intelligence of the conditioned souls is generally not large enough to house. This seeming contradiction can be understood, however, by the example of the fire and its potency heat. Heat is the potency of fire and it has specific burning power obtained from it's origin, the fire. In some ways the heat is the same as the fire itself, and in other ways it is different. In the same way everything that exists is the potency of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, simultaneously one and different from Him. “In this way the simultaneous oneness and difference may be understood. We may also note in this verse that the word ‘bhava-saktayah’ means ‘perfect by nature’. In this way, even though the Personality of Godhead is never touched by the three modes of material nature, and even though He never directly contacts the material nature, He creates the material universes, and performs various activities within them, by means of His inconceivable potencies.” 9 That the Personality of Godhead is the master of inconceivable potencies is also confirmed by the following statement of the Svetasvatara Upanisad (6.8): “He does possess bodily form like that of an ordinary living entity. There is no difference between His body and His soul. He is absolute. All His senses are transcendental. Any one of His senses can perform the action of any other sense. Therefore, no one is greater that Him or equal to Him. His potencies are multifarious, and thus His deeds are automatically performed as a natural sequence.”* 10 That the Personality of Godhead is the master of innumerable potencies is also confirmed by the following statement of the Sruti-sastra (Svetasvatara Upanisad 4.10): “Although maya is false or temporary, the background of maya is the supreme magician, the Personality of Godhead, who is Mahesvara, the supreme controller.”* 11 Everything that exists is the potency of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and is simultaneously one and different from Him just as heat is not different from fire. The word ‘bhava-saktayah’ may also be interpreted to mean ‘produced from the transcendental body of the Lord.’ Because the Lord’s potencies are manifested from His own form, they are also simultaneously one and different from Him. No one can defeat this argument or prove anything different than this. That the Personality of Godhead is the master of innumerable potencies is confirmed in the following statements of the Upanisads: “The Personality of Godhead has multifarious potencies.” Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.8 “The Personality of Godhead is the supreme master and controller of everything that exists.” Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad 4.4.22 12 In this passage (from the Visnu Purana, quoted in Texts 5 and 6) Maitreya poses his question from the point of view of the impersonalists, who maintain that the Supreme has no qualities, and Parasara Muni replies by taking the stance of the personalists who teach that the Supreme has qualities, and that variety exists even in the spiritual world. Maitreya uses words like “suddhasya” (pure) and ‘adehasya’ (without a body) to describe the Supreme. He was thinking in terms of an impersonal Supreme without potencies. Parasara Muni, in his reply, used these same terms to describe the personal feature of the Supreme. In Parasara’s answer the term ‘nirgunasya’ (without qualities) used by Maitreya to describe the Supreme was answered by the word ‘acintya-jnana-gocarah’ (inconceivable). By using this word, Parasara hinted to Maitreya that the Supreme is called ‘nirguna’ (without qualities) because His qualities are so great that they cannot be fully or properly understood by the individual living entities. When Maitreya used the words ‘amalatmanah’ (flawless) and ‘suddhasya’ (pure), he considered that the Supreme was without qualities, in other words he thought of the Supreme as pure in the way an unflawed piece of glass or crystal is pure by virtue of having no qualities. Parasara Muni accepted the description of the purity of the Supreme in a different way. For Him the Supreme had qualities, but no vices or imperfections. In this way the Supreme is pure. In his answer Parasara rejected the impersonalistic concept of the Supreme referred to by Maitreya and instead described the Supreme as person, the master of innumerable inconceivable potencies. Heat is sometimes present in water, air, or other elements, but it is always present in the fire-element, and can never be separated from it. Just as heat is always present in fire, in the same way the inconceivable potencies of the Supreme cannot be separated from Him. They are an intrinsic part of His nature. Because the Supreme possesses unlimited inconceivable potencies, He is the greatest, and no one is equal or greater than Him. This is confirmed in the following statement of Svetasvatara Upanisad (6.8): "No one is equal to or greater than the Supreme Personality of Godhead." 13 In the Upanisads and other Vedic literatures the Lord's potencies are sometimes described as 'brahma' (the greatest). This does not mean that the Lord's potencies are greater than the Lord Himself, but merely that the Lord's potencies are extremely powerful, and cannot be checked by anyone except for the Personality of Godhead Himself. The Lord's transcendental potency activates the material nature, which moves the three modes of material nature, which become transformed into the 'sarga-sakti' (potency of material creation) and other material potencies. In this way the affairs of the material universes are conducted by the Lord's potencies, without any direct intervention by the Personality of Godhead, who is never touched by the material energy. 14 The word 'brahma' (the greatest) is also used to describe the Lord's potencies in the following statement of the Chandogya Upanisad (3.14.1): "This entire material world is Brahman, the greatest." This description of the material potency of the Lord as the 'greatest', should be understood, however, only in a relative sense, for the Lord's material potency is not greater than the Lord Himself, as Maitreya Muni has already explained by using the word 'nirgunasya' (untouched by the material modes of nature) to describe the Lord. The Svetasvatara Upanisad (4.10) also describes the Personality of Godhead as superior to His material potency in the following words: "The Personality of Godhead is the master and controller of this material world, which is His illusory potency, maya." That maya is inferior to the Personality of Godhead is also confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (1.7.4): "The illusory potency maya takes shelter of the Personality of Godhead and is independent on Him." In this way the Personality of Godhead is superior to His illusory potency, maya, even though that potency is sometimes described as 'brahma' (the greatest). Because the Lord's potencies (known as 'brahma') are subordinate to Him, He delegates to them various duties in relation to the material world. They contact the material energy, not He. 15 That the Personality of godhead is superior to

His potencies ('brahma') is also confirmed in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavad-gita (13.12-13), where the Lord Himself says: "I shall now explain the knowable, knowing which you will take the eternal. This beginningless, and it is subordinate to Me. It is called Brahman, the spirit, and it lies beyond the cause and effect of this material world."* 16 The Supreme Truth has innumerable inconceivable potencies, which may be grouped into four broad categories: 1. His internal potency, 2. The secondary potencies manifest from His internal potency, 3. The individual living entities (jivas), and 4. The unmanifest state of the modes of material nature (pradhana). As the sun remains in one place, although its potency, the sunshine, expands in all directions, so the personality of Godhead remains in one place, although His variegated potencies are everywhere. 17 This is described in the following statement of the Visnu Purana (1.22.54): "Just as the illumination of a fire, which is situated in one place, is spread all over, the energies of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Parabrahman, are spread all over this universe."* 18 This is also confirmed by the following statement found in both the Katha Upanisad (2.2.15) and Svetasvatara Upanisad (6.14): "This entire cosmos is the effulgence manifested from the Supreme Personality of Godhead." 19 Someone may argue that it is contradictory to say that the Supreme stays in one place, and at the same time He is present everywhere. This objection is not valid, for the Lord possesses all inconceivable potencies by which He can do any impossible thing. In this way He can be simultaneously localised and all-pervading. The Lord's potencies are divided into three categories as follows: 1. Antaranga-sakti, the internal potency, which is present in the spiritual world of Vaikuntha, 2. Tatastha-sakti, the marginal potency, or individual spirit souls, who are like sparks of the Supreme Whole, and 3. Bahiranga-sakti, the external potency known as maya, which is inert matter, the unmanifested stage (pradhana) of the modes of nature. These three potencies of the Lord are described in the following statement of the Visnu Purana (6.7.61-63): 20 However, there is another energy, called illusion, which consists of fruitive activity. That is the Lord's third potency."* 21 "This living entity, covered by the influence of nescience, exists in different forms in the material energy, to greater or lesser degrees."* 22 In this verse the words 'avidya-karma' mean 'the potency that bewilders', and the word 'samjna' (named) identifies that potency as the illusory potency, maya. Although the maya potency is external and inferior to the marginal potency, or individual living souls, nevertheless, the external potency has the power to cover and bewilder the marginal potency. This is explained in the next verse, where the word 'taratamyena' describes the external potency's ability to place the individual spirit-souls in various higher and lower material bodies, extending from the body of the demigod Brahma down to the insignificant bodies of plants and other non-moving creatures. This power of the external potency over the marginal potency is described in the following statement of Srimad-Bhagavatam (1.7.5): "The individual living entities (jivas) are placed in illusion by the external potency, maya.” 23 In this verse (1.7.5) the word ‘yay’ refers to the Lord’s inconceivable illusory potency maya, by whose influence the unmanifested modes of material nature (pradhana) are inert, unconscious and constantly mutable. That the pradhana is manifested from the maya-potency we shall demonstrate later on in this book. The three potencies: ataranga, tatastha and bahiranga, are similar in many but not all respects. Each has distinguishing features, and each has some defects not present in the others.

1 The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the master of all spiritual and material potencies. Even Hiranyakasipu confirms this in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 7.3.34): “Let me offer my respectful obeisances to the Supreme, who possesses external and internal energies."* The Supreme Personality of Godhead is spiritual in nature and He is the shelter of innumerable spiritual potencies (the individual living entities). He is like the sun-planet, which by nature consists of light, and which is the shelter of innumerable rays of light, which have the same nature as the sun-planet itself. The marginal spiritual potency known as jiva-sakti, or the individual spiritual entities, will be explained in the next treatise, the Paramatma-sandarbha. 2 In the following statement of the Visnu Purana (1.19.76-77) the antaranga-sakti (internal potency) is described by contrasting it with the bahiranga-sakti (external, material potency): "O Supreme Personality of Godhead, O master of the demigods, O Supersoul present in the hearts of all creatures, I offer my respectful obeisances to Your inferior material potency, which is eternal, and which is the resting place for the three modes of material nature. O Lord, I also offer my respectful obeisances to Your internal, spiritual potency, which has no material attributes, and which cannot be understood by the material mind or material words, but only by the statements of the advanced transcendentalists." We may note that the Lord possesses innumerable spiritual potencies. This is confirmed by the following statement of the Svetasvatara Upanisad (6.8): "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the master of multifarious superior spiritual potencies."

Anuccheda 18

1 In the following statement of Srimad-Bhagavatam (2.9.34), the Personality of Godhead describes the external, material potency, bahiranga-sakti, in the following words: “O Brahma, whatever appears to be of any value, if it is without relation to Me, has no reality. Know it as My illusory energy, that reflection which appears to be in darkness.”* 2 In the first part of this verse, the Personality of Godhead says: “O Brahma whatever appears to be of any value, if it is without relation to Me, has no reality.”* 3 In this verse the word ‘atmanah’ means ‘of Me, the Supreme Personality of Godhead”, and the word ‘maya’ refers to two potencies of the Lord: the bahiranga-sakti, or material energy maya, and the tatastha-sakti, or individual spirit souls. Interpreted in relation to the individual spirit souls, the word ‘abhasa’ means ‘effulgence’. In other words, the individual spirit souls are likened to particles of light emanating from the supreme sun of the Personality of Godhead. If the word ‘maya’ is taken to mean the bahiranga-sakti, then the word ‘abhasa’ may be understood to mean ‘illusion’. The illusory potency presents a great variety of constantly changing forms of the inert material energy, which bewilders the conditioned souls by presenting before their eyes a great variety of temporary and constantly changing forms of the inert and unconscious material energy, or three modes of nature, goodness, passion and ignorance. The word ‘abhasa’ is used in this way, to mean the material cosmos, in Srimad Bhagavatam (2.10.7 abhasas ca nirodhas ca). The word ‘abhasa’ is also described in Visnu Purana 1.22.54 (quoted in Anuccheda 16, Text 17). 4 The Lord’s potencies are also described in the following statement spoken by the scholars of the Ayur-Veda: “The Personality of Godhead, whose desires are automatically fulfilled, is the original creator of the material universes. His form is eternal and full of transcendental knowledge, and His eternal transcendental potency emanates from Him as particles of light from the sun. As an actor, who changes his appearance when he enters the stage, the Personality of Godhead appears in the form of the Supersoul when He enters the material realm. He activates the inert material energy, and in this way causes the creation of the material universes.” 5 In the first part of the verse, where the Lord’s ‘maya’ is described as ‘abhasa’, the word ‘abhasa’ may be interpreted in two different ways in order to match the two interpretations of the word ‘maya’ (which may mean either the individual spirit souls or the external material energy). In the second part of the verse, where the ‘abhasa’ is described as reflected on the ‘tamah’ (darkness), there is no need to interpret the word ‘tamah’ in two different ways in order to fit the two interpretations of the words ‘maya’ and abhasa'. The single meaning 'darkness' naturally fits the two possible interpretations of the verse. 6 The darkness (tamah) of the material cosmos is described as created by the Lord's shadow. This is described in the following verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (3.20.18), where Maitreya Muni says to Vidura: "First of all, Brahma created from his shadow the coverings of ignorance of the conditioned souls. They are five in number and are called tamisra, andha-tamisra, tamas, moha and mahamoha."* 7 The material world is also compared to darkness (tamah) in the following verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.11) where Lord Brahma says to Lord Krsna: "Where am I, a small creature of seven spans the measure of my own hand? I am enclosed in the universe composed of material nature, the total material energy, false ego, ether, air, water and earth. And what is Your glory? Unlimited universes pass through the pores of Your body just like particles of dust passing through the opening of a window."* 8 This verse (3.20.18 quoted in text 8) explains that Brahma, using the instrument of the shadow potency (chaya-sakti) manifested 'avidya' at the time of creating the material universe. The word 'avidya' here may refer either to the different classes of conditioned souls (jiva-maya) or to the different manifestations of the modes of nature (guna-maya). 9 The difference between the avidya-sakti (ignorance potency) and vidya-sakti (knowledge potency) is described in the following verse of Srimad-Bhagavatam (11.11.3) where Lord Krsna says: "O Uddhava, both knowledge and ignorance, being products of maya, are expansions of My potency. Both knowledge and ignorance are beginningless and perpetually award liberation and bondage to embodied living beings." 10 The knowledge potency is described in the following verses of the Padma Purana (Uttara-khanda 73.230-231) in the Karttika-mahatmya, in connection with the prayers of the demigods to Maya, which are related by Lord Krsna to Satyabhama-devi: "As the demigods were offering prayers in this way, they saw a portion of the sky become very brilliant with a great light. From that effulgent part of the sky they heard the goddess Sarasvati speak the following words: 'I appear in this material world in three ways, in relation to the three modes of goodness, passion, and ignorance.'" 11 The ignorance-potency (avidya-sakti) is described in the following statement of the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda (91.51) where the Supreme Personality of Godhead says to Lord Brahma: "The dense darkness of the ignorance potency in this material world is immeasurable and inexhaustable."

Anuccheda 19

1 The internal spiritual potency (antaranga-sakti), without whose help the individual living entities are powerless to act, is described in the following two verses of Srimad-Bhagavatam (6.16.23-24), where Narada Muni says to Maharaja Citraketu: 2 “The Supreme Brahman emanates from the Supreme Personality of Godhead and expands like the sky. Although untouched by anything material, it exists within and without. Nonetheless, the mind, intelligence, senses and living force can neither touch Him nor know Him. I offer unto Him my respectful obeisances.”* 3 “As iron has the power to burn when made red-hot in the association of fire, so the body, senses, living force, mind and intelligence, although merely lumps of matter, can function in their activities when infused with a particle of consciousness by the Supreme Personality of Godhead. As iron cannot burn unless heated by fire, the bodily senses cannot act unless favoured by the Supreme Brahman."* 4 Sridhara Svami comments on these verses in the following words: "In the first verse (6.16.23) Narada said: The Supreme Brahman (yat) emanates from the Supreme Personality of Godhead and expands like the sky (vitatam vyomavat). Nonetheless, the living force (asavah) can neither touch him (na sprsati) by using the instrument of kriya-sakti, nor can the mind, intelligence and senses know Him (na viduh) by using the instrument of jnana-sakti. I offer unto Him my respectful obeisances (nato smi). The reason the mind, intelligence, senses and living force cannot understand the Supreme Brahman is explained in the next verse (6.16.24), where Narada says: 'The body, senses, living force, mind and intelligence, although merely lumps of matter, can function in their activities (karmasu) when infused by a particle of consciousness (ami yad-amsa-viddhah) by the Supreme Personality of Godhead." Without the Supreme Personality of Godhead's intervention, they cannot act either in the states of wakefulness, dreaming, deep-sleep, unconsciousness, or any other condition of life. In order to explain the senses' dependence on the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Narada gives the following example: 'As iron cannot burn unless heated by fire (aprataptam lauham), the bodily senses cannot act unless favoured by the Supreme Brahman.' A red-hot iron rod get its burning potency from fire, and although it can burn many objects, it cannot burn fire itself. In the same way, because the material body, senses, living force, mind and intelligence of the living entities have obtained their powers to act (kriya-sakti) and understand (jnana-sakti) from the Supreme Personality of Godhead, although they may be able to touch or understand many things, they are unable to touch or understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the source of all their power." 5 That the senses are dependent on the Supreme Personality of Godhead for their powers is confirmed by even Sankaracarya, the leader of the impersonalists, who in the course of refuting the atheistic Sankhya philosophy said (Sariraka-bhasya 1.1.5): "The material eyes have the power to see because it is given to them by the Supreme. As an iron rod or similar object obtains the power to burn by being placed near a fire, so the senses obtain the power to act from the Supreme. The omniscient Supreme Truth is the primary cause of the entire material cosmos." 6 That the senses are dependent on the Supreme Personality of Godhead is also confirmed in the following statements of the Upanisads: "When the Supreme Personality of Godhead appears, then the various different planets may also become manifested. They cannot appear unless He appears first." Katha Upanisad 2.2.15, Mundaka Upanisad 2.2.10 and Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.14 "Unless the supremely blissful Personality of Godhead is present within the sky of the heart, what living entity has the power to do anything, or even to remain alive?" Taittariya Upanisad 2.7.1 "The Supreme Personality of Godhead grants the power of sight to the eyes and the power of hearing to the ears of the individual living entities." Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad 4.4.18 7 In the concluding portion of his commentary on this verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 6.16.24) Sridhara Svami says: "At this point someone may say: 'All right, the senses cannot act independently, only the individual spirit soul is the seer and the knower of what is experienced by the senses.' To this I reply; 'No, no, in all states of being, whether awake, dreaming, or deeply asleep, the individual living entity is dependent on the Supreme. Without the mercy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the individual spirit soul cannot see or perceive anything with any one of his senses (na drastrapadesam eti). This is confirmed in the following statement of Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad (3.7.23): 'Without the Supreme Personality of Godhead's mercy, no one can see anything.' "Another way to interpret the words no drastrapadesam eti is to accept them as meaning: 'Although the senses of the individual living entity can perceive various things, under normal conditions they cannot perceive the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is the source of their power.'" 8 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the origin of all sensory perception is confirmed in the following statement of Srimad-Bhagavatam (2.10.9): "All three of the above-mentioned stages of different living entities are interdependent. In the absence of one, another is not understood. But the Supreme Being who sees every one of them as the shelter of the shelter is independent of all, and therefore He is the supreme shelter."* 9 In various places in the Sruti-sastra also it is confirmed that the individual living entities (jivas) are never independent of the Supreme Personality o Godhead. He is the original seer of everything, and no one can see anything without His mercy. In this way these verses (6.16.23-24) may be understood.

1 That the senses of the conditioned souls cannot perceive the Supreme Personality of Godhead who is the source of their power is confirmed in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (6.4.25) where Maharaja Daksa says: “Because they are only matter, the body, the life airs, the external and internal senses, the five gross elements and the subtle sense objects (form, taste, smell, sound and touch) cannot know their own nature, the nature of the other senses or the nature of their controllers. But the living being, because of his spiritual nature, can know his body, the life airs, the senses, the elements and the sense objects, and he can also know the three qualities that form their roots. Nevertheless, although the living being is completely aware of them, he is unable to see the Supreme Being, who is omniscient and unlimited. I therefore offer my respectful obeisances unto Him.”* 2 In this verse the word ‘prana’ means ‘life-airs’, ‘aksah’ means ‘the senses’, ‘manavah’ means ‘the mind’, ‘bhuta-matram’ means ‘the tan-matras’, ‘atmanam’ means ‘themselves’, ‘anyam’ means ‘other areas of perception’. The demigods who are beyond (param) these two they do not know. These things they do not know (na viduh). ‘Puman” means “the living being”, ‘sarvam’ means ‘themselves and whatever is beyond themselves’. Beyond themselves (param) are the material body, things in relation to the body, and the controlling demigods. This the living entity knows (veda). ‘Gunams ca’ means ‘the mode of goodness and the other material modes’, which are the root from which the material bodies and other material things have grown. Even though the living entity knows all these (taj-jnah) he still does not know (na veda) the sarvajna. Sarvajna here means “He who knows the living entities and everything else also.’ The word ‘anantam’ is explained in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (1.18.19): “The Personality of Godhead, unlimited, in potency and transcendental by attributes, is called the ananta (Unlimited).”* The speaker then says: “I worship (ide) the unlimitedly powerful Supreme Lord.” 3 In connection with the statement that the individual entity is unable to see the Supreme the Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad (4.5.15) says: “There (in the material world of duality) the individual living entity sees the Supreme as different from himself.’ In these words is described how the individual spirit soul sees himself as different from the Supreme. The Upanisad then says: “When he sees that everything is the Supreme Soul, then how, or what will he see (that is different from himself)?” Then the living entity does not see the Supreme Soul as the observer, but rather he sees that everything is the observer of the Supreme Soul and that what he sees is himself.” Then the Upanisad says: “How can he know the knower?” An explanation of the meaning of these passages follows. In these statements the word ‘yatra’ means ‘in the illusory potency, maya, where duality is manifested.’ Under the influence of the inconceivable potency named maya, and under the influence of the temporary world of the contamination of matter, what is not different is perceived to be different. Because of this influence the individual spirit soul is born again and again as if he were independent and separate. In this way the ‘separate’ (itarah) living entity sees others as ‘separate’ (itaram). He is able to see others as separate because the instrument of seeing and the object of vision are both suitable for this kind of vision. That is the meaning. The word ‘yatra’ here means ‘in His personal potency’. The individual soul, or jiva here is compared to a particle of light, and the Supreme Soul, described here as the ‘atma’, is compared to the sun-globe. The words ‘sarvam abhut’ mean that everything is manifested by the Lord’s personal potency. Everything exists from beginningless time. It is not manifest only in that entrance at that time. What (kam) and by what separate (itarena) method (kena) can the separate (itarah) individual soul (jiva) see? He cannot see anything by any such method. That is the meaning. By their own power individual rays of light cannot display the splendour manifest in the sun itself and neither can individual sparks burn a fire. That is the meaning. By what separate method may one understand the omniscient (vijnataram), unlimited, omnipotent Supreme Soul? There is no separate method to understand Him. That is the meaning. When the jnana-sakti is manifest, then the kriya-sakti and iccha-sakti are also seen. The verse quoted in Text 1 was spoken by Maharaja Daksa to the Supreme Personality of Godhead

The Supreme Personality of Godhead is always in full control of His various potencies. This is confirmed by the following verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (7.9.22) where Prahlada Maharaja says to Lord Nrsimhadeva: “My dear Lord, O supreme great, You have created this material world of sixteen constituents, but You are transcendental to their material qualities. In other words, these material qualities are under Your full control, and You are never conquered by them. Therefore the time element is Your representation. My Lord, O Supreme, no one can conquer You. As for me, however, I am being crushed by the wheel of time, and therefore I surrender fully unto You. Now kindly take me under the protection of Your lotus feet.”* Sridhara Svami explains that the word ‘sva-dhamna’ means ‘by Your personal spiritual energy’, and ‘kala’ means ‘the time element, which creates the material manifestation, or maya.’ ‘Atma’ here means ‘the individual living entities’, and ‘guna’ means the three modes of material nature (goodness, passion, and ignorance). Although the individual living entities may come under the control of the modes of nature, the Supreme Personality of Godhead is never controlled by them. This is confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (11.25.12) where the Personality of Godhead says: “The individual living entities may come under the control of goodness, passion and ignorance, but I am never controlled by them.”

1 That the Supreme Lord's potencies are always under His full control is also confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (5.18.38), where the Earth-deity says to Lord Varaha: "O Lord, You do not desire the creation, maintenance or annihilation of this material world, but You perform these activities for the conditioned souls by Your creative energy. Exactly as a piece of iron moves under the influence of a lodestone, inert matter moves when You glance over the total material energy."* 2 Sridhara Svami explains in his commentary: "This verse means" 'O Lord, You do not desire the creation (nepsitam), maintenance or annihilation of this material world (visva-sthiti) but You perform (karoti) these activities for the conditioned souls by Your creative energy (maya) who uses the three modes of material nature (gunaih) as her instruments. As (yatha) a piece of iron (ayah) moves (bhramati) under the influence of a lodestone (gravnah), inert matter moves when You glance (saksine) over the total material energy, observing the modes of nature (guna) and the fruitive actions of the conditioned souls (karma), which although seen by you, remain invisible to them. I therefore offer my respectful obeisances unto (namah).'"

Anuccheda 23

1 The Personality of Godhead is always situated in transcendence and filled with spiritual bliss. In this condition He remains eternally unaffected by the inert material potency maya. This is described in the following verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (1.7.23), where Arjuna says to Lord Krsna: “You are the Original Personality of Godhead who expands Himself all over the creations and is transcendental to material energy. You have cast away the effects of the material energy by dint of Your spiritual potency. You are always situated in eternal bliss and transcendental knowledge.”* 2 In this verse the word ‘adyah purusah’ refers to the Bhagavan feature of the Lord, and the word ‘isvarah’ refers to the Supersoul feature of the Lord. Both features of the Lord are described as ‘prakrteh parah’ (transcendental to the material energy). Someone may ask the following question: “Please describe how the Bhagavan feature of the Lord enjoys transcendental bliss untouched by the material energy, and please also explain how it is possible for the Supersoul feature of the Lord to remain untouched by the material energy, even though the Supersoul is the predominating Deity who controls the material energy, and is apparently directly in contact with it?” To these questions the following answers may be given: The Supreme Personality of Godhead, by His transcendental internal potency, sends the external illusory potency, maya, far away from Himself. By means of His internal spiritual potency He enjoys transcendental knowledge and bliss (kaivalye). This is described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (11.9.18) where it is said: 3 “He is also the supreme worshipable object for all beings, including liberated souls, demigods and ordinary conditioned souls. The Lord is eternally free from any material designation, and he constitutes the totality of spiritual bliss derived from perception of His own spiritual form. The Lord exhibits the fullest meaning of the word liberation”. 4 In this verse from the Eleventh Canto of the Bhagavatam, the Personality of Godhead is describes as situated in His own transcendental eternal bliss (atmani sthitah). This is also explained in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (6.9.33): “O my Lord, You are situated in Your own transcendental bliss.” 5 In the quote from the Eleventh Canto of Srimad Bhagavatam (11.9.18) the word ‘sandoha’ (multitude) indicates that the spiritual potencies of the Lord are manifested in endless variety. In connection with the verse from the first canto (1.7.23), Sridhara Svami has explained that the word ‘prakrteh’ refers to the three modes of material nature. That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the master of all potencies is also described by Devahuti-devi in the following verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (3.24.33): 6 “I surrender unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead, descended in the form of Kapila, who is independently powerful and transcendental, who is the Supreme Person and the Lord of the sum total of matter and the element of time, who is the fully cognisant maintainer of all the universes under the three modes of material nature, and who absorbs the material manifestations after their dissolution.”* 7 Sridhara Svami comments on this verse in the following words: “In this verse the word param means ‘the Supreme Personality of Godhead.’ Why is He the Supreme Godhead? The reasons are given in the following words: He is ‘svacchanda-sakti’ (the independent master of innumerable potencies), ‘pradhanam purusam’ (the Lord of the sum total of matter, ‘mahantam’ (the Universal Form), ‘kalam’ (time, which prods the material energy into activity), ‘tri-vrtam’ (the three modes of nature, and the false-ego), and ‘loka-pala’ (the maintainer of all the universes. After describing how the Personality of Godhead is the master of the material creation, Srimati Devahuti-devi explains that the Supreme Lord, by manifesting His internal spiritual potency, remains always untouched by the material energy. In this connection she says atmanubhutyanugata-prapancam’ (He manifests His spiritual potency, and thus absorbs the material manifestations after their dissolution). She also describes the Supreme Personality of Godhead as ‘kavim’ (He who is fully cognisant of everything that happens in the material realm).” 8 Although the Personality of Godhead sometimes remains within the material energy as its controller, He is always superior to that energy and aloof from it. This is confirmed in the following statement of Lord Kapiladeva Srimad-Bhagavatam (3.26.3): “The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the Supreme Soul, and He has no beginning. He is transcendental to the material modes of nature and beyond the existence of this material world. He is perceivable everywhere because He is self-effulgent, and by His self-effulgent lustre the entire creation is maintained.”* 9 In the course of describing the Supreme Lord’s holy names and forms, the Maha-samhita gives the following description of the Lord’s three material potencies: “The Personality of Godhead manifests three potencies in relation to the conditioned souls in the material world. These three potencies are known as 1. Sri, or the potency for maintaining the material universes, 2. Bhu, or the potency for creating the material universes, and 3. Durga, or the potency for annihilating the material universes. Aside from these potencies, the Lord has His own personal potencies (atma-maya) which are manifested as iccha-sakti (His spiritual potency, by which whatever He wishes becomes immediately fulfilled), and guna-maya-sakti, (His external potency, by which the inert material universes are constructed).” In this verse the word ‘sri’ means ‘the potency for maintaining the material universes’, ‘bhu’, means ‘the potency for creating them’, and ‘durga’ means ‘the potency for annihilating them’. These are the divisions of different potencies. The potency of the individual living entities is called ‘jiva-maya.’ 10 These three (Sri, Bhu and Durga) potencies of the Lord are described in the following passage of the Padma Purana (Karttika-mahatmya 73.231-232) where Lord Krsna says to Satyabhama-devi: “Lord Krsna said: ‘O Satyabhama, I remain in this material world in the form of My three potencies associated with the three modes of material nature.” When the demigods heard this statement of the Lord, they understood His intention, and with great devotion they offered their respects to the three goddesses Laksmi-devi, Parvati-devi and Prthivi-devi, the three potencies of the Lord.” 11 The three potencies of the Personality of Godhead are also described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (11.3.16), where Antariksa Rsi says: “I have now described maya, the illusory energy of the Supreme

Personality of Godhead. This illusory potency, consisting of the three modes of material nature, is empowered by the Lord for the creation, maintenance and annihilation of the material universe. Now, what more do you wish to hear?" 12 The demigod Brahma describes the Supreme Personality of Godhead's potencies in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.13.45): "As the darkness of snow on a dark night and the light of a glow-worm in the light of day have no value, the mystic power of an inferior person who tries to use it against a person of great power is unable to accomplish anything; instead the power of that inferior person is diminished."* 13 In this verse Brahma explains that there are different degrees of mystic power (maya). A small amount of mystic power may be genuine or illusory, but whatever the nature of that power, if someone uses a small mystic power challenge a greater power, the small power will certainly be defeated and appear insignificant in relation to the greater power. To demonstrate this, Brahma gives to examples in this verse. 14 The word 'maya' in this verse means 'mystic power'. It does not mean 'illusion' here. For example, the Puranas and other Vedic literatures sometimes describe battles where various weapons composed of 'maya' wounded and killed many soldiers. If the 'maya' which was the active principle of those weapons had been an illusion, it would not have been able to hurt anyone, just as no one becomes wet by touching the mirage of water seen in a desert. The word 'maya' is used in various Vedic literatures to describe the Lord's eternal transcendental potency, which always accompanies Him. For example the Catur-veda-sikha explains: "The eternal Personality of Godhead, Lord Visnu, is described as the supreme master of all transcendental potencies (maya-mayam)." The Maha-samhita explains: "The potency known as atma-maya fulfils all the desires of the Supreme Personality of Godhead." This atma-maya is manifested in two divisions as jnana-sakti and kriya-sakti. The word 'maya' may also be interpreted to mean 'knowledge', for the Vedic dictionary explains: "Another meaning of the word maya is knowledge." 15 Some different meanings from the word 'maya' are given in the following verse from the Sabda-mahodadhi Dictionary: "They who understand the meanings of words say that the word 'maya' may be defined to mean: 1. The three modes of material nature, 2. Knowledge, and 3. The transcendental potency of Lord Visnu." 16 In this verse the word 'gunatmika' may be understood to mean the Lord's original potency, by which the modes of nature and the various material universes are created. According to the Trikhanda-sesa Dictionary the word 'maya' may be interpreted in two ways: "The word 'maya' may be understood to mean 'trickery' or 'mercy'." In his commentary on Srimad-Bhagavatam (11.24.27) Sridhara Svami says: "The word 'maya-maye' used in this verse may be understood to mean 'pushing the illusory potency into action', or 'full of knowledge', depending on whether we interpret the word 'maya' to mean 'illusory potency' or 'knowledge'. Commenting on Srimad Bhagavatam (9.20.27) Sridhara Svami also says: "The word 'maya' used in this verse should be understood to mean 'opulences.'" In his commentary on Srimad-Bhagavatam (3.15.26) Sridhara Svami has explained that the word ‘yoga-maya’ used in that verse may be interpreted to mean either ‘the mystic yoga powers attained by the Four Kumaras’, or ‘the spiritual pastime potency of the Personality of Godhead.’ In Srimad Bhagavatam 1.7.23, the verse quoted in the beginning of this Anuccheda, Arjuna explains that in the liberated Vaikuntha spiritual planets (kaivalye), which are situated on the platform of liberation, the Personality of Godhead appears in His own plenary portion (atmani sthitah). One may ask: How is the Supreme Lord situated in that spiritual world? The answer is given in the next part of the verse: “You cast away the effects of the material energy by dint of Your spiritual potency.” In this verse the word ‘maya’ is used in the sense of ‘the illusory material energy’, and it is clearly explained that the illusory material energy has no influence over the Personality of Godhead and cannot enter His spiritual world of Vaikuntha. This is also explained in the following verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (2.9.10), where Srila Sukadeva Gosvami says: 17 “In that personal abode of the Lord, the material modes of ignorance and passion do not prevail, nor is there any of their influence in goodness. There is no predominance of the influence of time, so what to speak of the illusory, external energy, it cannot enter that region. Without discrimination, both the demigods and the demons worship the Lord as devotees.”* 18 In the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda, the following synonyms are given for the word ‘vaikuntha’: “Some synonyms for the word ‘vaikuntha’ are: 1. Moksa (the position of liberation), 2. Param padam (the supreme abode), 3. Lingam (the subtle spiritual realm), 4. Amrtam (the eternal place), and 5. Visnu-mandiram (the palatial residence of Lord Visnu).”

1 That the transcendental form of the Personality of Godhead is full of all spiritual attributes and opulences is confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.87.38) where the Personified Vedas address the Lord: “O Supreme Personality of Godhead, when there is cosmic manifestation, the jivatma, or the individual soul, appears in the creation in different forms, according to his previous fruitive activities, and due to his long forgetfulness of real existence, he identifies himself with a particular form awarded to him by the laws of material nature. After assuming a material form, he becomes subjected to the three material modes of nature and acts accordingly to continue his existence in the material world. While enwrapped in such ignorance, his natural opulences, although existing in minute quantity, are almost extinct. Your opulences, however, are not diminished, although You appear within this material world. The conditioned soul becomes entrapped in the material world, whereas You leave it without affection, just as a snake sheds his skin. The distinction between You and the conditioned individual soul is that You maintain Your natural opulences, known as sad-aisvarya, asta-siddhi and asta-guna.” 2 Sridhara Svami comments on this verse in the following words: “In this verse the word ‘sah’ means ‘the individual spirit soul’. ‘Yat’ means ‘because’, ‘ajaya’ means ‘by the material energy maya’, ‘ajam’ means ‘ignorance’, ‘anusayita’ means ‘embraces’, ‘gunams ca’ means ‘the material body and senses’, ‘jusan’ means ‘serving, or considering the material body as the self’, ‘svarupatam jusan apeta-bhagah’ means ‘absorbed in the material energy, the individual spirit soul become bereft of his natural spiritual opulences such as bliss and knowledge’, ‘mrtyum’ means ‘the material realm of repeated birth and death’, ‘bhajati’ means ‘attains’, ‘tvam uta’ means ‘but You’, and ‘jahasi tam’ means ‘abandon all attachment for that material energy.’ 3 “At this point someone may ask: ‘O Lord, how is that You remain aloof from the material energy maya?’ In order to answer this question, the Personified Vedas say: ‘Ahir iva tvacam’ (O Lord, just as a snake sheds its skin, in the same way you shed all contact with the illusory potency maya). This means: ‘You never fall into the illusion of identifying with a material body constructed of the three modes of material nature’. Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the master of limitless transcendental bliss and knowledge, He remains always aloof from the inferior material energy. 4 “Someone may ask: ‘How is it that the Personality of Godhead remains full of all transcendental opulences?’ To answer this question, the Personified Vedas say: ‘Atta-bhagah’ (O Lord, You are full of eternal spiritual opulences). Now someone may ask: ‘How is it that the Supreme Lord’s opulences are so extraordinary?’ To answer this question, the Personified Vedas say: ‘Aparimeya-bhagah’ (O Lord, Your opulences are unlimited. Neither time nor space impose restrictions on Your opulences).” 5 The limitless opulences of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are also described in the following verse from Srimad Bhagavatam (10.87.14), where the Personified Vedas say to the Supreme Lord: “O Lord, You are the master of all opulences.” 6 The example of the snake shedding its skin may be explained in the following way: A snake shed its skin when the skin becomes too old. The snake will not go at all near the old rejected skin, but avoids it completely. In the same way, the Personality of Godhead will not even come near the material energy maya, but completely rejects it. 7 The Lord’s transcendental opulences are also described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.37.22), where Lord Krsna is addressed in the following words: “O Lord, You are full of supremely pure transcendental knowledge. All Your desires are automatically fulfilled, and none of Your desires can ever be thwarted.”* 8 In the following verses from Srimad Bhagavatam (11.15.3-5) the Personality of Godhead describes His opulences to Uddhava: “The masters of the yoga system have declared that there are eighteen types of mystic perfection and meditation, of which eight are primary, having their shelter in Me, and ten are secondary, appearing from the material mode of goodness.” 9 “Among the eight primary mystic perfections those three by which one adjusts one’s own body are anima, becoming smaller than the smallest, mahima, becoming greater than the greatest, and laghima, becoming lighter than the lightest. Through the perfection of prapti one acquires whatever one desires, and though prakamya-siddhi one experiences any enjoyable object, either in this world or the next.

Through isita-siddhi one can manipulate the sub potencies of maya, and through the controlling potency called vasita-siddhi one is unimpeded by the three modes of material nature. One who has acquired kamavasayita-siddhi can obtain anything from anywhere, to the highest possible limit. My dear gentle Uddhava, these eight mystic perfections are considered to be naturally existing and unexcelled within this world." 10 The potencies of the Supreme Personality of Godhead included the material potency maya. Maya is described in the following verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (7.6.23), where Prahlada Maharaja says to the sons of the demons: "The Personality of Godhead is simply perceived as the supreme sac-cid-ananda (eternity, knowledge and bliss). Being covered by the curtain of the external energy, to the atheist He appears non existent."* 11 Srila Sridhara Svami discusses this verse: "Someone may ask: 'If God is all-pervading, then why do we not see the omniscient, all-powerful Godhead everywhere?' The answer to that question is given in this verse: 'mayayantarhitaisvaryah' (The supremely opulent Personality of Godhead is covered by the curtain of the external energy, and to the atheist He appears non-existent)." This verse explains that the glories and opulences of the Lord are hidden from the view of the conditioned souls by the external material potency (mayaya guna-sargaya). These explanations clearly refer to the Supreme Personality of Godhead who is indicated by the word 'paramesvarah'. 12 Maya is also described in the following statement of Svetasvatara Upanisad (4.5): "The unborn material nature creates the many material bodies assumed by the conditioned souls. This material nature has three features, the three modes of material nature: goodness (white), passion (red) and ignorance (black). In the conditioned state the unborn eternal spirit soul becomes the follower and servant of the material energy. When liberated from illusion, the spirit soul abandons the attempt to enjoy what is offered by the material energy." 13 How may the Supreme Personality of Godhead be described? He is the possessor of all knowledge and the master of all opulences and potencies. This is described in the following statements of Vedic literature: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the master of all transcendental qualities and potencies." Svetasvatara Upanisad 1.3 "The transcendental potencies of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are beyond the perception or description of the conditioned souls." Visnu Purana 1.19.77

1 This is also explained in Srimad Bhagavatam 11.13.40, where the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself says: “All superior transcendental qualities, such as being beyond the modes of nature, detached, the well-wisher, the most dear, the Supersoul, equally situated everywhere, and free from material qualities, find their shelter and worshipable object in Me.” 2 Sridhara Svami explains in his commentary: “What is the nature of the Supreme Personality of Godhead? He is described in this verse by the word ‘aguna’. Here the word ‘aguna’ means ‘without any of the temporary, constantly changing qualities of the material nature’. The Lord has no material qualities, for all His attributes are eternal and changeless.” This is also described in the following statement of the Narada-pancaratra, Jitanta-stotra: “I offer my respectful obeisances to the Supreme Personality of godhead. He is the original creator of everything. Although He has no material qualities, He is fully endowed with all six transcendental opulences.” 3 The transcendental qualities of the Lord are also described in the following statement of the brahma-tarka: “The Personality of Godhead possesses all transcendental qualities. The qualities of the Supreme Lord and the liberated living entities are the same. In quality they are one.” 4 The spiritual qualities of the Lord are also described in the following verses of the Kalika Purana, where goddess Durga prays to Lord Visnu: “O Personality of Godhead, even Brahma, the demigods, sages, and ascetics cannot understand Your transcendental forms. How is it possible, then, for an insignificant person like myself to describe You? O Lord, You are nirguna, without any material qualities. Even the demigods, headed by Maharaja Indra, and the demons cannot understand Your transcendental qualities. How is it possible, then, for me, who am only a woman, to understand them?” This verse was recounted by Sri Hamsadeva to Sanaka and the Kumaras.

1 In the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (1.16.29), the earthly deity confirms the statement of Hamsa-avatara (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.13.40 quoted in Anuccheda 26, text 1) and, after listing some of the Supreme Lord's transcendental qualities, (such as cleanliness and truthfulness) affirms that all these qualities are eternally present in the Lord, and He is never separated from them. She says: "Many transcendental qualities are eternally present in the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and are never to be separated from Him."* 2 Sridhara Svami explains in his commentary: "In this verse the word 'ete' refers to the 40 qualities of the Lord listed here. The words 'anye ca' refer to innumerable other great qualities of Lord not included in this list. Among such qualities are the Supreme Lord's mercy to the Brahmanas and His protection of the surrendered souls. The word 'nityah' means that the Lord's qualities are all eternal and they are naturally His property. They are not artificially imposed from without. The words 'na viyanti' mean that the Lord's qualities never deteriorate and the Lord is never bereft of them." 3 That the transcendental qualities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are beyond the influence of material time is confirmed by the following statement of Visnu Purana (4.1.27): “Time, which is composed of seconds, minutes, hours, years and so forth, is not able to change the eternal qualities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead.”

1 That the qualities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are completely spiritual and not at all material is also confirmed in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.28.7) where Varunadeva says to Sri Krsna: “O Lord, O Supreme Personality of Godhead, Supreme Brahman and Supersoul of everything, let me offer my respectful obeisances unto You. You are the supreme transcendental personality; there is no possibility of imposing the influence of material nature upon You.”* 2 In this verse the word ‘yatra’ refers to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is manifest as Brahman, Paramatma and Bhagavan. He is never under the influence of the external material energy (maya na sruyate). Maya’s jurisdiction is limited to the creation, maintenance, and annihilation of the various material universes. The Supreme Personality of Godhead is spiritual and beyond the limited material universes. Therefore He is not within maya’s jurisdiction, and He is not controlled by her. 3 As he was asking Srila Sukadeva Gosvami about the geography of the earth planet, Maharaja Pariksit spoke the following words

(Srimad Bhagavatam 5.16.3), confirming that the Personality of Godhead is beyond the reach of the material energy and the three modes of nature: “When the mind is fixed upon the Supreme Personality of Godhead in His external feature made of the material modes of nature - the gross universal form - it is brought to the platform of pure goodness. In that transcendental position, one can understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Vasudeva, who in his subtler form is self-effulgent and beyond the modes of nature.”*

1 That the material energy is ashamed even to approach the Personality of Godhead is described in the following verses of Srimad Bhagavatam (2.5.12-13) where Lord Brahma says to Narada: “I offer my obeisances and meditate upon Lord Krsna (Vasudeva), the Personality of Godhead, whose invincible potency influences them (the less intelligent class of men) to call me the supreme controller.* 2 “The illusory energy of the Lord cannot take precedence, being ashamed of her position, but those who are bewildered by her always talk nonsense, being absorbed in thoughts of ‘It is I’ and ‘It is mine’.” 3 In this verse Brahma explains that because the material energy, maya, is composed of the three modes of ignorance, passion and goodness, she is contaminated and full of faults. The Personality of Godhead, because He is spiritual, and possesses eternity, knowledge and bliss to the highest degree, is completely flawless. The contaminated material energy is therefore embarrassed to come within the energy is therefore embarrassed to come within the vision of the supremely pure Personality of Godhead. This verse explains that the material energy maya bewilders (vimohitah) Lord Brahma and all other conditioned souls.

1 Having demonstrated that the transcendental form of the Personality of godhead is full of the six opulences of wealth, strength, fame, beauty, knowledge, and renunciation, and many other powers and opulence also, we will now establish that the form of the Lord is perfect and complete in all respects. First we will show that because the Personality of Godhead is the supreme ruler of the spiritual planets known as Vaikunthaloka, therefore His spiritual form is eternal, and will never cease to exist. This is confirmed by the following three verses of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.3.25-27). when Lord Krsna descended to this material world, Devaki-devi prayed to Him (10.3.25): 2 “After millions of years, at the time of cosmic annihilation, when everything, manifested and unmanifested, is annihilated by the force of time, the five gross elements enter into the subtle conception, and the manifested categories enter into the unmanifested substance. At that time, You alone remain, and You are known as Ananta-Sesa-naga.”* 3 In the next verse (10.3.26) Devaki explained why the Lord is known by the name ‘sesa’: “O inaugurator of the material energy, this wonderful creation works under the control of powerful time, which is divided into seconds, minutes, hours and years. This element of time, which extends for many millions of years, is but another form of Lord Visnu. For Your pastimes, You act as the controller of time, but You are the reservoir of all good fortune. Let me offer my full surrender unto Your Lordship.”* 4 In this verse the word ‘avyakta-bandho’ means ‘O inaugurator of the material energy’, and ‘cestam’ means ‘time’, which is divided into seconds, minutes, hours, and years’. That the Personality of Godhead is the original creator of time is confirmed in the following statement of the Maha-Narrayana Upanisad (1.8): “Time is born from the splendid Personality of Godhead.”* In other words, time, which is the cause of the creation and destruction of the material universes, is simply one of the limbs of the Personality of Godhead. Although the Personality of Godhead is the origin of the destructive time-factor, still, He is also supremely auspicious, as Devaki-devi has said: ‘ksema-dhama’ (O Lord, You are the reservoir of all good-fortune). By His own wish the Supreme Lord appeared in this material world and frightened the demon Kamsa (by His time-potency), what to speak of giving protection to the devoted Devaki (ksema-dhama). These two activities are clearly described in the next verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.3.27) where Devaki says: 5 “No one in this material world has become free from the four principles of birth, death, old age, and disease, even by fleeing to various planets. But now that You have appeared, My Lord, death is fleeing in fear of You, and the living entities, having obtained shelter at Your lotus feet by Your mercy, are sleeping in full mental peace.”* 6 In this verse Devaki-devi contrasts the various material planets with the lotus feet of the Sri Krsna. By fleeing to various material planets (lokan prapya), one cannot become free from fear (nirbhayam). One the other hand, by taking shelter of Lord

Krsna's lotus feet (tvat-padabjam prapya), one becomes free from the fears of material existence. We may note in this connection that by saying 'tvat-padabjam' (Your lotus feet), Devaki-devi clearly refers not only to the Lord's lotus feet but to His complete transcendental form also. In this verse Devaki says that death flees in fear of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is also confirmed in the Visnu-sahasra-nama prayers, which describe the Supreme Lord as 'amrta-vapuh' (He whose form is eternal). Even Sankaracarya confirms this in His commentary on this word of the Visnu-sahasra-nama, by saying: "The word 'amrta-vapuh' means 'He whose form is free from death'." 7 In this verse the word 'adya' may be interpreted to mean: "O Lord who does not take birth in this material world, although You are the original father of all the living entities who do take birth here." That the Supreme Personality of Godhead does not take birth in the material world as an ordinary conditioned soul but appears here in His original transcendental form by His own wish, is confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.3.8) where the Lord's 'birth' as Devaki's son is described in the following words comparing the Lord's 'birth' to the rising of the moon: "Then the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Visnu, who is situated in the core of everyone's heart , appeared from the heart of Devaki in the dense darkness of night, like the full moon rising on the eastern horizon."* 8 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead never takes birth is also described in the following statement of Maha Upanisad: "Lord Hari is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and He is full of all transcendental bliss. He is never born and He never dies. He causes Brahma to create the material universe and Siva to destroy it." The verses quoted in the beginning of this Anuccheda were spoken to the Supreme Personality of Godhead by Sri Devaki-devi.

1 That the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is birthless and beginningless is also confirmed in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (5.25.9): “The Supreme Personality of Godhead is beginningless and unlimited. He enables the modes of material nature to act as the causes of universal creation, maintenance and destruction.”* 2 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is never affected by birth, death, or any other material transformation is explained in the following verse from Srimad Bhagavatam (5.17.19) where Lord Siva describes the Personality of Godhead Lord Sankarsana in the following words: “We cannot control the force of our anger. Therefore when we look at material things, we cannot avoid feeling attraction or repulsion for them. But the Supreme Lord is never affected in this way. Although He glances over the material world for the purpose of creating, maintaining and destroying it, He is not affected, even to the slightest degree. Therefore, one who desires to conquer the force of the senses must take shelter of the lotus feet of the Lord. Then he will be victorious.”* 3 That the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is always unaffected by the transformations caused by the material energy is confirmed by the following statements of Srila Sukadeva Gosvami: “My dear King, approximately 240 000 miles beneath the planet Patala lives another incarnation of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. He is the expansion of Lord Visnu known as Lord Ananta or Lord Sankarsana. He is always in the transcendental position, but because He is worshipped by Lord Siva, the deity of tamo-guna or darkness, He is sometimes called tamasi. Lord Ananta is the predominating Deity of the material mode of ignorance as well as the false ego of all conditioned souls. When a conditioned living being thinks ‘I am the enjoyer, and this world is meant to be enjoyed by me’, this conception of life is dictated to him by Sankarsana. Thus the mundane conditioned soul thinks himself the Supreme Lord.”* Srimad Bhagavatam 5.25.1 “In Ilavrta-varsa, Lord Siva is always encircled by ten billion maidservants of goddess Durga, who minister to him. The quadruple expansion of the Supreme Lord is composed by Vasudeva,, Pradyumna, Anirrudha and Sankarsana. Sankarsana, the fourth expansion, is certainly transcendental, but because his activities of destruction in the material world are in the mode of ignorance, He is known as tamasi, the Lord’s form in the mode of ignorance. Lord Siva knows that Sankarsana is the original cause of his own existence, and thus he always meditates upon Him in trance by chanting the following mantra.”* Srimad Bhagavatam 5.17.16 4 That all the forms of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are transcendental to the inferior material energy is also confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (5.25.10) where Srila Sukadeva Gosvami says: “This manifestation of subtle and gross matter exists within the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Out of causeless mercy toward His devotees, He exhibits various forms, which are all transcendental. The Supreme Lord is most liberal, and He possesses all mystic power. To conquer the minds of His devotees and give pleasure to their hearts, He appears in different incarnations and manifests many pastimes."* 5 That all the forms of the Personality of Godhead are eternal is also confirmed by the following prayer from the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda: "I offer my respectful obeisances to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who appears as the Universal Form. All the forms of the Lord are birthless, deathless and unlimited." 6 Here someone may protest that there are statements in the Skanda Purana and other Vedic literatures that describe the Supreme Lord's form as temporary and material. Such statements are deliberately inserted in some scriptures in order to hide the Lord's glories from the eyes of the atheists, and the Puranas containing such faulty information are clearly known as Puranas in the mode of ignorance. Even the Srimad Bhagavatam contains some few statements that are not to be accepted by the devotees as the Bhagavatam itself declares (10.77.30): We will specifically establish this point later on in the Sri Krsna-sandarbha. 7 My only opinion is that the Lord's forms are certainly eternal and transcendental and this view is confirmed by the statements of Srimad Bhagavatam 1.16.27 (where the earth deity explains that the Supreme Lord's qualities, such as beauty, endurance, energy, and strength are all eternal), 10.3.25 and 5.25.9 which have been quoted in the previous texts. The verse quoted in the beginning of this Anuccheda was spoken by Srila Sukadeva Gosvami.

1 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is all-pervading is confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.9.13-14): “The Supreme Personality of Godhead has no beginning and no end, no exterior and no interior, no front and no rear. In other words, He is all-pervading. Because He is not under the influence of the element of time, for Him there is no difference between past, present and future; He exists in His own transcendental form at all times. Being Absolute, beyond relativity, He is free from distinction between cause and effect, although He is the cause and effect of everything. That unmanifested person, who is beyond the perception of the senses, had now appeared as a human child, and mother Yasoda, considering Him her own ordinary child, bound Him to the wooden mortar with a rope.”* 2 Srila Sridhara Svami comments on this verse in the following words: “If an object has limits of beginning and end, it may be bound with a rope, but if an object has no limits, then it cannot be surrounded by anything, or bound with any rope. In this verse Srimad Bhagavatam confirms that Sri Krsna is all-pervading and without limits (na cantah). Indeed, He is everything (jagac ca yah). Still, ‘the unmanifested Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is beyond the perception of the senses (adhoksajam) had now appeared as a human child (martya-lingam) and Mother Yasoda considering (matva) Him (tam) her own ordinary child (atmajam) bound (babandha) Him to the wooden mortar with a rope..’” 3 The phrase ‘jagac ca yah’ (He is everything in creation in total) may be understood in the following way: The Supreme Personality of Godhead is not different from either the cause of creation, or the cosmic manifestation that is the effect of that cause. In other words, because the entire material universe is nothing but the potency of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, He is not different from it. Because an ordinary material rope is simply a fragmental part of one of His energies, such a rope has no power to bind Him, any more than a small flame has the power to burn up a large fire. 4 At this point someone may raise the following objection: “If the Supreme Personality of Godhead is all-pervading, then how is it possible that

Yasoda-devi tied Him with a small rope that could not even have extend the breadth of the material universe?" This objection is answered in this verse by the words 'martya-lingam' (in order to perform His pastimes, the Supreme Personality of Godhead appeared like an ordinary human child). In order to act like an ordinary human being, the Supreme Lord allowed Himself to be bound by Mother Yasoda's rope. 5 At this point someone may raise the following question: 'If the Supreme Personality of Godhead has a human-like form, than that form is certainly manifested within a limited area of space. How can such a limited form be all-pervading?" This question is answered by the use of the word 'adhoksajam' (beyond the perception of the senses). The form of the Personality of Godhead cannot be properly understood by the senses of the conditioned soul, nor can it be understood by any other process for acquiring knowledge available to the conditioned souls. Because He is thus inconceivable, although He may appear to be limited within time and space, in actual fact He is all-pervading. Because He is not properly understood by ordinary living entities, He is therefore described in this verse as 'avyaktam' (unmanifested). 6 At this point someone may ask: "If the Supreme Personality of Godhead is all-pervading, even though His form appeared like that of an ordinary human being, then why did He not reveal His all-pervading nature to His mother, Yasoda-devi?" This question is answered by the words 'atmajam-matva' (Mother Yasoda considered Krsna her own ordinary child). The relationship between Sri Krsna and Yasoda-devi was that of son and mother. In order not to disrupt the blissful exchange of love between Himself and His mother, Lord Krsna concealed His all-pervasiveness and His other opulences from her eyes. Mother Yasoda's ignorance of the super human prowess of her son was actually her great glory, for in order to keep the loving parent-child relationship with her, He allowed Himself to be bound by a few small ropes. The exalted position of Mother Yasoda is described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.9.20): "Neither Lord Brahma, nor Lord Siva, nor even the goddess of fortune, who is always the better half of the Supreme Lord, can obtain from the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the deliverer from this material world, such mercy as received by mother Yasoda."* 7 Some may say that the phrase 'adhoksajam prakrtam yatha' means that the Personality of Godhead, who is all-pervading, accepted the illusory form of a human being through the agency of His maha-maya potency. Such a conception is completely false. They who think that the Supreme Lord, who cannot be touched by the material potency maya, can be understood by the infantile logic of the conditioned souls, are great fools. They are just like the gullible audience that believes in the existence of the magician's creation of a blazing fire in the middle of the ocean. They do not understand the nature of the Supreme. That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is difficult to understand is confirmed by the following statement of Sruti-sastra: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is all-powerful. He alone created all the demigods. Who can understand how He appears in this world?" 8 In this verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.9.13-14), the relative and co-relative pronouns 'yat' and 'tat' both refer to Sri Krsna. For this reason it should be understood that the form of Sri Krsna is simultaneously limited within space, (because He has a clearly defined form with hands, feet, and other limbs) and also all-pervading. These apparently contradictory qualities of the Lord may be accepted because He is the reservoir of hundreds of mutually contradictory potencies, and therefore any otherwise impossible thing may easily be done by Him. That mutually contradictory actions may performed by a single cause may be seen even in the material sphere where there are some medicines that create many different effects on the body, some of them contradicting other effects caused by the same medicine. 9 That Sri Krsna is simultaneously limited within space and also all-pervading is possible because He is the master of all inconceivable potencies which cannot be grasped by the tiny brains of the conditioned souls, is confirmed by the following statement of Brahma-samhita (5.34): "I worship Govinda, the primeval Lord, only the tip of the toe of whose lotus feet is approached by the yogis who aspire after the transcendental and betake themselves to pranayama by drilling the respiration; or by the jnanis who try to find out the non differentiated Brahman by the process of elimination of the mundane, extending over thousands and millions of years." 10 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead possesses mutually contradictory qualities, including the ability to be simultaneously limited in space and all-pervading, is confirmed in the following statement of the Sruti-sastra as quoted in the commentaries of Sripada Madhvacarya: "Lord Hari is neither large, small, or of a middle-size. He is simultaneously all-pervading and not all-pervading. He has and does not have a beginning. He is and is not the material universe. He has qualities and He does not have qualities." 11 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead possesses mutually contradictory qualities is also described in the following statement of the Nrsimha-tapani Upanisad (2.6.1): "The Supreme Personality of Godhead exists outside the material sphere, but then again He exists within the material sphere. He is the self, but then again He is not the self. He is ferocious and He is also not ferocious. He is powerful and also powerless. He is great, and He is also not great. He is all-pervading, and not all-pervading. He is very splendid and He is not splendid at all. His faces are manifest everywhere, and again His faces are not manifest everywhere." 12 This is also confirmed by the following statement of the Brahma Purana: "The Supreme Godhead has a form neither large nor small. He is not the material universe, but then again He is the material universe. He possesses innumerable qualities and opulences, many of which contradict each other. Because He is full of all opulences, He is known as the Supreme Person." 13 This is also confirmed by the following statement of the Visnu-dharma Purana: "I offer my respectful obeisances to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is simultaneously the greatest and the smallest. He is one thousandth the six of an atom, and at the same time He is so large that all the material universes barely occupy a millionth part of the size of

His abdomen.” 14 The Supreme Personality of Godhead describes His own self-contradictory powers and opulences in the following verses of Bhagavad-gita (9.4-5): “By Me in My unmanifested form, this entire universe is pervaded. All beings are in Me, but I am not in them. And yet everything that is created does not rest in Me, behold My mystic opulence!”* We may note that the word ‘avyakta-murtina’ used in this verse may mean ‘by My form, which is beyond the comprehension of the limited material intelligence.’

1 In the next section of this book (Anucchedas 31-39) we will quote various statements of the demigod Brahma that confirm the statement that the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is simultaneously limited within space, and yet all-pervading. In the first quotation (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.11) Brahma says: “Where am I, a small creature of seven spans of the measure of my own hand? I am enclosed in the universe composed of material nature, the total material energy, false ego, ether, air, water and earth. And what is Your glory? Unlimited universes pass through the pores of Your body just like particles of dust passing through the opening of a window.”* 2 In the next verse Brahma explains (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.12): “O Adhoksaja, if a child within the womb plays with his legs, and while playing touches the body of the mother, is the mother offended with the child? Of course she isn’t. Similarly, I may be a very great personality within this universe, and yet not only myself but everything that be is existing within You. Therefore You are considered to be the mother and everything existing within Your womb is considered to be a child. And a good mother is never offended with the child, even if he touches her body by kicking his legs.”* 3 In the next verse (10.14.13) Brahma explains that it is well known that Brahma himself has taken birth from the Supreme Personality of Godhead: “At the end of the universe, when the three planetary systems are merged into the ocean of devastation, Your plenary portion Narayana lies down on the waters of that ocean, and from His navel a lotus stem grows. The Puranas describe that Brahma, the unborn, appears from that lotus stem. O Supreme Controller, indeed, am I not born from You?”* 4 Considering that Lord Krsna might say “If I were Lord Narayana, who lies down on the waters of devastation, then you might say that you have taken birth from Me. The actual truth, however, is something else. I am not Narayana”, Brahma spoke the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.14): “O Lord of lords, You are the seer of all creation. You are indeed everyone’s dearest life. Are You not therefore, my father, Narayana? Narayana refers to one whose abode is in the water born from Nara (Garbhodakasayi Visnu) and that Narayana is Your plenary portion. All Your plenary portions are transcendental. They are absolute and are not creations of maya.”* 5 In this verse the word ‘adhisa’ means ‘O Supreme Personality of Godhead, who are situated above the form of Lord Narayana, who resides in the hearts of all conditioned souls,' 'hi' means 'certainly', 'narayanas tvam na' means 'Are You not Narayana?', and 'naravano nigam' means 'Lord Narayana is Your plenary portion'. Brahma says in this verse 'O Lord, because I have taken birth from Your plenary portion, therefore it may be considered that I have taken birth from You." 6 Brahma thought Sri Krsna might say; 'How is it that You say I am Lord Narayana? Certainly there is a great difference between Lord Narayana and Me. In order to answer this question, Brahma said the words 'dehinam atma' (You are Lord Narayana, the all-pervading Supersoul present in the hearts of all conditioned souls). The word Narayana may be interpreted to mean 'He who is the refuge (ayana) of all living entities (nara). Narayana is the Supersoul who resides in the hearts of all conditioned souls, but Sri Krsna is the Original form of the Personality of Godhead, situated above Narayana, and taking no part in Narayana's activities as the Supersoul. 7 Lord Brahma continued His explanation by using the word 'akhila-loka-saksi' (Lord Narayana is the seer of all creation). If the word 'nara' is taken to mean 'all living entities' and the word 'ayana' is taken to mean 'understanding', the word 'narayana' may be understood to mean 'He who knows everything about all living entities.' In this way the word 'akhila-loka-saksi' refers to Lord Narayana. Lord Krsna does not directly take part in the activities of witnessing the actions of the conditioned souls, but He does this activity through His plenary expansion of the Supersoul Narayana. In this way, also, Lord Krsna is different from Narayana. 8 Brahma thought that Sri Krsna might raise the following objection: 'My dear Brahma, your statement 'narayanas tvam na' certainly means that I am not Narayana. If one were to interpret this phrase to mean that I am Lord Narayana, then this interpretation would make no senses. How is it possible that I am Lord Narayana?" In order to answer this possible objection, Brahma addressed Krsna using the word 'adhisa', 'Isa' means 'the controller', and that word clearly refers to Lord Narayana, the controller of all living entities. The word 'adhisa' however, means 'the controller of the controller'. In other words, by addressing Sri Krsna as 'adhisa', Brahma explained that Krsna is the controller of Lord Narayana, just as the king of a country is the controller of many aristocrats. That Sri Krsna is the Original Personality of Godhead, superior to Lord Narayana and the other forms of the Lord will be explained at a later time, according to the methodical arrangement of these six sandarbhas, in the book known as Sri Krsna-sandarbha. 9 At this point someone may object: The proper understanding of the name Narayana is found in the following statement of Vedic literature: "They who are wise know that the word 'nara' means 'the various material elements manifested from the purusa-avatara (nara). 'Ayana' means 'resting place', and therefore the word 'narayana' means 'He who is the resting place within which the various material elements are contained.'" 10 Our objector may also quote the following verse from Visnu Purana (1.4.6) to support his interpretation of the name Narayana: "The water (Garbhodaka ocean) produced from the purusa-avatara is known as ‘nara’. ‘Ayana’ means ‘resting place’, and therefore the name ‘narayana’ means ‘He who rests on the Garbhodaka ocean.’” 11 Thinking Sri Krsna might interpret the word ‘narayana’ to mean ‘He who lies down on the Garbhadaka Ocean’, Brahma said: ‘nara-bhu-jalayanat tac capi satyam na tavaiva maya’ (The word ‘Narayana’ does not mean ‘He who lies down on the Pralaya ocean’. This interpretation of the word ‘Narayana’ is created by Your illusory potency, maya).” Here we may quote the Visva-prakasa Dictionary’s definition of the word ‘maya’: “The word ‘maya’ may be taken to mean ‘trickery’ or ‘mercy’. The meaning of Brahma’s statement should be understood in the following way: “O lord, because of Your inconceivable potency, Your form is simultaneously limited in space and also all-pervading. Therefore any conception of You that limits You to the form of Narayana who lies down on the Pralaya ocean is certainly an illusion.” In these four verses Brahma says: ‘O Lord, myself, this entire universe, and all other universes also, all rest in Narayana. The form of Narayana, however, rest within You.” Therefore the proper definition of the word ‘Narayana’ is ‘He who is all-pervading.” 12 The proper interpretation of the word Narayana is given in the following mantra of the Maha-Narayana Upanisad (2.6): “Lord Narayana is all-pervading. He is present within and without everything that has ever been seen or heard in all the material universes.”

1 Brahma cites his own direct experience to prove that Sri Krsna's transcendental form is not limited by the Garbhodaka Ocean or any other boundary placed within this material world. He says (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.15): "The gigantic universal body, which is still resting on the water known as Garbhodaka, is another manifestation of Your energy. On account of His resting on the water, this universal form is also Narayana, and we are all within the womb of this Narayana form. I see Your different Narayana forms everywhere. I can see You on the water, I can feel You within my heart, and I can also see You before me now. You are the original Narayana."* 2 In this verse Brahma said: "The form of Narayana, who rests on the Garbhodaka Ocean, is not eternally manifest there. O Lord who is the master of all inconceivable opulences (bhagavan), if this form eternally remains on the Garbhodaka Ocean, then why did I not see it when I climbed down the stem of the lotus flower? "If one were to say that the form of Naryana is an illusion created by the maya-potency (which is described in the Trikanda-sesa Dictionary as 'the energy by which Sambara and others created many illusory things that did not actually exist) then why was it that I was able to see the form of Narayana, which is eternal, full of knowledge and bliss, when I meditated upon Him and was able to see Him in my heart, although after the yogic meditation was ended I was no longer able to see Him?" From this we may understand that the transcendental form of the Lord is certainly real and eternal, but the conception that the Lord's existence is limited by any specific form, and therefore He is not all-pervading, is not a true conception.

Anuccheda 35

1 The account of Brahma's failure to see Narayana by climbing down the lotus stem, and His ultimately seeing Him in the trance of meditation is recounted in the Third Canto of Srimad Bhagavatam and the reader is referred to that for the details of the story. In this verse the words 'tac cej jala-stham tava saj jagad vapuh' inform us that the form of Lord Narayana is real, eternal, and transcendental, and because the material universe is expanded from that Supreme Reality of Lord Narayana, it is also real. The material universe is situated within the form of the Lord Narayana, as was directly perceived by Mother Yasoda. This is explained by Brahma in the next verse (10.14.16): 2 "My dear Lord, in this incarnation You have proved that You are the supreme controller of maya. You remain within the cosmic manifestation, and yet the whole creation is within You. This fact has already been proved by You when You exhibited the whole universal creation within Your mouth before Your mother Yasoda. By Your inconceivable potency of yogamaya, You can make such things effective without external help."* 3 In this verse Brahma says: "My dear Lord, in this incarnation You have proved that You are the supreme controller of maya (mayadhamanavatare). You remain within the cosmic manifestation, and yet the whole creation is within You" (prapancasya bahih sphutasya krtsnasya cantar jathare). Because Lord Krsna is both within and without the cosmic manifestation, we may understand that He is not limited by the boundaries of matter, and when He appears to occupy a limited position in relation to time and space, that appearance of limitation is simply an illusion. Although Lord Krsna appears to be situated within the cosmic manifestation, the cosmic manifestation is also within Him, for it has emanated from Him. Brahma says in this verse: "O Lord, By Your inconceivable potency of yogamaya, You are now all-pervading within the cosmic manifestation, although originally the cosmos is within You." Brahma gives an example to demonstrate that the cosmos actually exists within Lord Krsna by saying: 'This fact has already been proved by You when You exhibited the whole universal creation within You mouth before Mother Yasoda."

1 In this verse the word ‘mayadhamana’ means ‘O supreme controller of maya’. Brahma said: ‘O Lord, by Your mercy You revealed that the entire cosmic manifestation is situated within You.’ In order to establish the truth of this statement, as well as to refute any contrary argument, Brahma spoke the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.17): 2 “My dear Lord Krsna, the whole cosmic manifestation that we are visualising at present is all within Your body. Yet I am seeing You outside, and You are also seeing me outside. How can such things happen without being influenced by Your inconceivable energy?”* 3 When the words of this verse are placed in their prose order they read ‘yasya kuksau sarvam idam satman yatha bhati tat sarvam iha (bahir api tathaiva) tvayi bhati’. The meaning of this verse is that just as Sri Krsna is situated within Vrajabhumi, in the same way (because Sri Krsna is all-pervading) Vrajabhumi is situated within Him. In this way the statement of Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.16, that Sri Krsna is within the cosmic manifestation, and the cosmic manifestation is also within Him, is confirmed. When Mother Yasoda saw Sri Krsna before her with the entire cosmos within His mouth, she was able to directly perceive these two truths about Krsna. At that time she tried to understand what she had just seen and she said (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.8.40): “Is this a dream, or is it an illusory creation by the external energy? Has this been manifested by my own intelligence, or is it some mystic power of my child?”* Brahma explains in this connection: “O Lord, although by the power of Your inconceivable potency You appear to occupy a limited space within the land of Vraja, You are nevertheless all-pervading. You directly showed these two truths about Yourself to Your mother, Yasoda.” 4 The statement of this verse (10.14.17) is also confirmed by the following explanation of Srimad Bhagavatam (2.7.30): “When the cowherd woman (Krsna’s foster mother, Yasoda) was trying to tie the hands of her son with ropes, she found the rope to be always insufficient in length, and when she finally gave up, Lord Krsna, by and by, opened His mouth, wherein the mother found all the universes situated. Seeing this, she was doubtful in her mind, but she was convinced in a different manner of the mystic nature of her son.”* This is confirmed by the words ‘(tava) kuksau sarvam idam yatha bhati iha’ (My dear Lord Krsna, the whole cosmic manifestation that we are visualising at present is all within Your body). Although the cosmic manifestation is situated within You, You are still all-pervading within it. The Bhagavatam says: ‘tvayi tat sarvam bhati’ (Everything is present within You).

1 Brahma intended to say: “O all-pervading Lord, without being influenced by Your maya-potency, which conceals the actual truth about You, how is it possible to believe that You are limited by the boundaries of material time and space? It is not possible. This I have directly seen.” Brahma said (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.18): 2 “My dear Lord, leaving aside all other thins and just considering today’s happenings - what I have seen - are they not all due to Your inconceivable energies? First of all I saw You alone; thereafter You expanded Yourself as Your friends, this calves and all existence of Vrndavana; then I saw You and all the boys as four-handed Visnus, and They were being worshipped by all elements and demigods, including myself. Again They were all wound up, and You remained alone as You were before. Does this not mean that You are the Supreme Lord Narayana, the origin of everything, and from You everything emanates, and again everything enters unto You, and You remain the same as before?”* 3 In this verse Brahma says: ‘Just today (adyaiva) was it not revealed to me (mama) that this universe (asya), which is filled with bewildered conditioned souls and is a product of Your maya potency (mayatvam), has emanated from Your humanlike form (tvad rte)? This has certainly been revealed to me.” 4 At this point Lord Krsna might raise the following question: “What is the nature of My form?” In order to answer this question Brahma says: ‘eko si’ (You are alone). This means ‘Now that all the cowherd boys and calves have disappeared, You have manifested Yourself as these boys and calves, and therefore these are all You (eko si). Because You are able to do this, I declare that You are in truth the non-dual Supreme Brahman (advayam brahma)”. All material substances are born at a certain time, remain manifested for a certain period, and perish at certain time. These material changes are known as the ‘duality’ of matter. Because the Supreme Brahman is not affected by any of these changes, but is eternal and unchanging, He is known as ‘advayam’. The Supreme Brahma is by nature all-pervading. By establishing Sri Krsna as the Supreme Brahman, Brahma has proven that Sri Krsna is all-pervading.

1 At this point Sri Krsna might raise the following question: “At the beginning of universal creation, only Brahma, Visnu, and Siva were manifest, and they are considered the original causes of everything that exists. During the time of cosmic manifestation, many incarnations also appear, and I may be considered such an incarnation, but how is it possible to say that I am the original cause of all causes? Brahma, Siva and Visnu are the original causes.” To answer this question, Brahma says (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.19): 2 “Persons who are unaware of Your inconceivable energy cannot understand that You alone expand Yourself as the creator Brahma, maintainer Visnu, and annihilator Siva. Persons who are not in awareness of things as they are contemplate that I, Brahma, am the creator, Visnu is the maintainer, and Lord Siva is the annihilator. Actually, You are alone everything: creator, maintainer and annihilator."* 3 In this verse the second-person pronoun 'tvam' (You) is the subject of the sentence and the word 'bhasi' (are manifest) is the verb. The word 'iva' (as if) does not refer to 'tvam', but rather to 'esah' (He, Lord Visnu). The word 'esah' does not refer to the transcendental form of Lord Krsna, because Lord Krsna is the Original Personality of Godhead, and not a guna-avatara, such as Lord Visnu is. To consider Sri Krsna as guna-avatara would contradict the previous verse, where Brahma said: "O Krsna, everything emanates from You." In this verse the word 'tvat-padavim' means 'Your transcendental form', 'ajanatam' means 'to those who do not understand', 'atma' means 'You who are the origin of all incarnations of Godhead', 'atmana' means ;by Your various expansions', 'mayam' means 'the potency for creating, maintaining, and annihilating the material universes', 'anatmani' means 'in the inert, unconscious, unmanifested three modes of material nature (pradhana), which are the original cause of the mahat-tattva, and other forces that cause the creation of the material universes', 'vitatya' means 'having expanded' and 'bhasi' means 'You are manifested, appearing in different forms according to these different activities of creation, maintenance, and annihilation of the material universes." At this point Sri Krsna might say: 'How is it possible that I perform the activities of Brahma, Visnu and Siva?" In order to answer this question, Brahma says: 'You appear as if You are me, who am engaged in the activities of universal creation (jagatah srstav aham), You appear as if You are Visnu, who is engaged in the activities of universal maintenance (vidhane esa iva), and You also appear as if You are Siva, who is engaged in the activities of universal destruction (ante tri-netra iva). In truth, You expand Yourself in these various forms. Only they who are foolish and bewildered see these three demigods as different from You." 4 That Sri Krsna performs the activities of creation, maintenance and destruction of the material universes is confirmed by the following verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (2.6.32), where Lord Brahma says: "By His will, I create, Lord Siva destroys and He Himself, in His eternal form as the Personality of Godhead, maintains everything. He is the powerful controller of these three energies."* From this verse we may understand that Lord Visnu is a direct manifestation of the Personality of Godhead, and thus He is essentially non-different from the transcendental form of Sri Krsna. Visnu is therefore, different from Brahma and Siva, who are not direct manifestations of the Personality of Godhead, but are of a different category.

Lord Krsna expands not only as the guna-avataras, but as other incarnations as well. Brahma describes this in the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.20): “Similarly, You expand Yourself in different incarnations among the demigods You incarnate as Vamanadeva, among the great sages You incarnate as Parasurama, among the human beings You appear as Yourself, as Lord Krsna, or Lord Rama, among the animals You appear as the boar incarnation , and among the aquatics You appear as the incarnation of fish. And yet You have no appearance; You are always eternal. Your appearance and disappearance are made possible by your inconceivable energy just to give protection to the faithful devotees and to annihilate the demons.”* We may note that in this verse the words ‘ajanasya janma (the unborn has taken birth) indicate that Sri Krsna does not take birth, but simply appears in this world according to His own wish.

Anuccheda 40

1 At this point Sri Krsna might raise the following objection: “My dear Brahma, how is it that you have come to this conclusion? It is not possible for My form to be all-pervading. My form is composed of various material elements just like an earthen pot or other material substances seen in this world. How is it that you say My form is otherwise? How is it that you say My form is spiritual? You may have become a little bewildered seeing some wonderful opulences here, but I assure you, you perfectly understand Me. You completely know the full extent of My powers. As far as the transformation of these boys and calves into four-armed Visnu-forms which you have just seen, it has happened somehow or other, because of the expansion of some unknown person, but I have certainly nothing to do with this magical display. Furthermore, all these forms are spiritual, full of knowledge and unlimited bliss, and all these human-like forms appeared at the same moment, and there were so many of them, that you did see all of them. How is it possible for a little cowherd boy like Me to manifest so many spiritual forms at the same time? I am not the cause of this wonderful thing." Thinking that Sri Krsna might present this argument, Brahma said (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.21): 2 "O supreme great one! O Supreme Personality of Godhead! O Supersoul, master of all mystic power! Your pastimes are taking place continuously in these worlds, but who can estimate where, how and where You are employing Your spiritual energy and performing Your pastimes? No one can understand the mystery of these activities."* 3 In this verse Brahma says" "O Lord, Your pastimes are taking place continuously (kati va) in these worlds (trilokyam), but who can estimate (ko vetti) where (kva), how (katham) and when (kada) You are employing Your spiritual energy (yogamayam vistarayan) and performing Your pastimes (kridasi bhavata utih)? No one can understand the mystery of these activities." No one can completely understand Lord Krsna. This is also confirmed by the following statement of the Kena Upanisad (2.3): "One who thinks he understands the Supreme Personality of Godhead does not actually understand Him, but one who knows that he does not actually understand the Lord is actually aware of the nature of the Supreme Person." 4 In the previous four verses Brahma has explained that Sri Krsna is by nature inconceivable. In this verse he explains why the Lord is inconceivable by addressing Him with the word 'bhuman', which means 'O Lord who appears in innumerable different forms.' This means that although the Supreme Personality of Godhead has one principal form, He also appears in innumerable other transcendental forms. This is confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.40.7), where Akrura prays to Sri Krsna: "I offer my obeisances to the Supreme Personality of Godhead who, although Me originally appears in a single transcendental form, has expanded into innumerable other transcendental forms." In this connection the Sruti-sastra also says: "Although He is one, the Supreme Personality of Godhead is seen to appear in many different transcendental forms." 5 The Supreme Personality of Godhead appears in different forms according to the way in which He is worshipped. This is confirmed by the following statement of Madhva Muni in his commentary on Vedanta-sutra 3.3.52: "The Personality of Godhead appears in different forms according to the way in which His devotees worship Him." The following example may be given in this regard: A silken garment may be fashioned with many different colours in an intricate design, just as a peacock feather is decorated with many colours. If one looks at a specific part of such a garment he may see a specific colour, and if one looks at another part of the garment he may see another colour. If one looks at the entire garment at once he will see the garment as a whole. In this example Sri Krsna is the entire garment, and when He is partially manifested this is known as the various incarnations of Godhead. 6 That innumerable forms of Godhead emanate from the form of Sri Krsna is also confirmed by the following statement of Narada-pancaratra: “When the jewel known as vaidurya touches other materials, it appears to be separated into different colours. Consequently the forms also appear different. Similarly, according to the meditational ecstasy of the devotees, the Lord, who is known as Acyuta (infallible) appears in different forms, although He is essentially one.”* In this verse the jewel referred to is the vaidurya stone (lapis lazuli), and the words ‘nila-pitadibhih’ refer to the various transcendental attributes of the Lord. This explanation of the various forms of the Lord reveals the meaning of the word ‘kva’ (where?) in the previously quoted statement of Lord Brahma (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.21). 7 The Supreme Lord’s expansion in the forms of the various incarnations manifested from His single original form is described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (8.18.12), where Srila Sukadeva Gosvami describes the form of the Vamana-incarnation: “The Lord appeared in His original form, with ornaments and weapons in His hands. Although this ever-existing form is not visible in the material world, He nonetheless appeared in this form. Then, in the presence of His father and mother, He assumed the form of Vamana, a brahmana-dwarf, a brahmacari, just like a theatrical actor.”* 8 In this verse Srila Sukadeva Gosvami explains that the Lord first appeared in His original form (vapuh), which is not a manifestation expanded from any other form of Godhead, but is originally existing and has no other forms as its origin. That form is spiritual (cit) and full of perfect and complete transcendental bliss, and that form is manifested (bhati) with ornaments and weapons in its hands (vibhusanayudhaih). The Lord appeared in this original form in the material world (vyaktam adharayat). After this original form was manifested, the Lord assumed the form of a brahmana-dwarf, a brahmacari (tenaiva vamano vatur babhuva harih). The word ‘eva’ (certainly) emphasises that this was the form the Lord assumed. He did not assume any other form at that time. 9 One may ask: “Under what circumstances did the Lord appear as the Vamana-incarnation?” The answer is given in this verse with the word ‘sampasyatoh’ (the Lord appeared as Vamana in the presence of His parents Kasyapa and Aditi). The question may be asked: “What is the nature of the Lord’s form? The answer is given in the word ‘divya-gatih’ (His movements are wonderful). ‘Divya’ means ‘supremely inconceivable’, and ‘gatih’ means ‘movements or pastimes’. The Lord’s forms and pastimes are all eternal, although sometimes they may be seen by the living entities, and sometimes they cannot be seen. That the Lord’s forms are eternal is confirmed by the following statement of Sruti-sastra: “The Personality of Godhead existed in the past. He exists in the present, and He will continue to exist in the future eternally.” 10 In this connection in order to given an example of how the Supreme Lord assumes the forms of His various incarnations, thus manifesting certain features of His original form, Sukadeva Gosvami says: “The Lord assumed the form of Vamana, just like a theatrical actor."* In this comparison of the Lord to an actor, Sukadeva Gosvami notes that the Lord is a wonderful actor (divya-gatih) and the gestures of His hands and movements of His body will fill the audience with wonder. Although when the Lord appears in His various incarnations He may seem to be an ordinary human being or demigod, in truth He never suffers the material miseries which are the everyday experiences of the conditioned souls, and He is never imperfect in any way. 11 The Personality of Godhead is supremely independent. For example, He creates the various material universes without any external help, just as a spider constructs a web from the saliva within its own body. This is described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (11.9.21): "As a spider creates a web with saliva from within its mouth, and then, having created it, again swallows it, so does the Supreme Personality of Godhead create, and again swallow, the material worlds." 12 In the following verse from Srimad Bhagavatam (3.9.11), Lord Brahma explains that the Personality of Godhead appears in the forms of His many different incarnations according to the different ways in which the devotees approach Him. Brahma says: "O my Lord, Your devotees can see You through the ears by the process of bona fide hearing, and thus their hearts become cleansed, and You take Your seat there. You are so merciful to Your devotees that You manifest Yourself in the particular eternal form of transcendence in which they always think of You."* In this verse the word 'pranayase' means 'You manifest'. We may note that by saying 'sruteksita-pathah' (the devotees learn about the Lord by hearing the bona-fide descriptions of Him in the Vedic literatures), Brahma confirms the reality of the Supreme Lord's transcendental forms. In other words, the Lord's forms are not the product of the meditator's imagination. They actually exist. 13 Some may say that the various forms of the Personality of Godhead do not delight the devotees. This false conception is refuted by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (3.24.31), where Kardama Muni addresses the Personality of Godhead in the following words: "My dear Lord, although You have no material form, You have Your own innumerable forms. They truly are Your transcendental forms, which are pleasing to Your devotees."* This verse means 'Whatever (yani yani) forms (rupani) of You (te) there are, these forms (tany eva), please (rocante) Your devotees.' The word 'abhirupani' means 'the Lord only accepts forms that are suitable.' He never accepts any unsuitable form. 14 The Lord may sometimes accept forms that appear to be unsuitable. An example of this is when He assumed an apparently abominable material form before King Rantideva. That this form was abominable and material is, of course, an illusion. This form is described in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 9.21.15): "Demigods like Lord Brahma and Lord Siva, who can satisfy all materially ambitious men by giving them the rewards they desire, then manifested their own identities before King Rantideva, for it was they who had presented themselves as the brahmana sudra, candala, and so on."* 15 Sridhara Svami comments on this verse: 'The word ‘tribhuvanandhisah’ means ‘Brahma, Visnu and Siva’, and the word ‘maya’ means that in order to examine how patient and tolerant Maharaja Rantideva was, the Lord, with the assistance of His bewildering maya-potency, assumed the form of the brahmana, sudra and candala.’ The reason the Lord never accepts an unpleasant form is given in the word ‘arupinah’, which means ‘He who never accepts a material form.” Sridhara Svami comments: “Because the Lord never accepts an abominable form, His forms are never material.” 16 Returning now to the verse originally under discussion (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.21, quoted in text 2) we may note the three phrases ‘katham va’ (how?), ‘kati va’ (how many?) and ‘kada va’ (when?), and we may also note the three words in the vocative case (bhagavan, paramatman, and yogesvara), used to address the Lord. Each of these three phrases is related to one of the three vocative addresses, as we shall now explain. The word ‘katham va’ (how You are performing Your pastimes)’ is used with the word ‘bhagavan’ which should be interpreted to mean “O Master of all inconceivable potencies.” The Lord’s form is full of all inconceivable potencies, and any other interpretation that contradicts this should not be accepted. 17 The word ‘kati va’ (how many times You incarnate and perform pastimes) is used with the word ‘paratman’, which may be explained to mean: ‘O Lord, because You are unlimited You possess all opulences and are the origin of innumerable incarnations of Godhead, who each possess limitless potencies. O Lord, You cannot be understood by the limited material mind or adequately described by the limited material power of speech. For this reason it is said: ‘No one can understand how many times You incarnate in this world and perform pastimes (kati va).” 18 The phrase ‘kada’ (when You appear and perform pastimes) is used with the word ‘yogesvara’ (O master of all mystic power). This word means ‘O Lord, You are the master of the yogamaya potency, by whose assistance You appear in many different forms. O Lord, all these transcendental forms of Your Lordship are contained within Your single most important form. When You wish, You appear in one of these forms, which are manifested according to the different ways in which the devotees worship You.” From this we may understand that the forms of all incarnations of Godhead are contained in the form of Sri Krsna, the Original Form of the Lord.

Anuccheda 41

1 In the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.22) Lord Brahma concludes that Sri Krsna is the Original Form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead: “My dear Lord, this whole cosmic manifestation is just like a flashing dream, and its temporary existence simply disturbs the mind. As a result, we are full of anxiety in this existence; to live within this material world means simply to suffer and to be full of miseries. And yet this temporary existence of the material world appears to be pleasing and dear on account of its having evolved from Your body, which is eternal and full of bliss and knowledge. My conclusion is, therefore, that You are the Supreme Soul, Absolute Truth, and the supreme original person; and although You have expanded Yourself in so many Visnu forms, or in living entities and energies, by Your inconceivable transcendental potencies, You are the supreme one without a second, You are the supreme Supersoul.”* 2 In this verse Brahma says: ‘O Lord, You are the origin of everything that is material and everything that is spiritual. Because You are the origin of everything, Your own form is eternal, and full of knowledge and bliss. From Your unlimited form, all the material universes have become manifested.” 3 One may ask: “What is the nature of this transcendental form of the Lord?” The answer is given in the words: ‘udayad api yat sad ivavabhati’ (O Lord, the material cosmic manifestation is continually being manifested from Your body, and then again enters within it. In this way the material universe is in a state of constant flux).” 4 At this point Sri Krsna might say: “If I am the source of the constantly changing material nature, then why is it that You say that I am unchanging. I should also be constantly changing if I am the source of all this change.” In answer to this, Brahma uses the word ‘mayatah’. Brahma says: “O Lord, You are eternal, and unchanging. This changing material universe is manifested by the aid of Your inconceivable potency known as maya. You are Yourself aloof from the changes of matter, and Your contact with matter, is only by the means of Your maya potency. Therefore You do not change.” That the Personality of Godhead is unchanging is also confirmed by the Vedanta-sutra 2.1.27: “The Supreme Personality of Godhead is free from all faults. This is so because it is declared in the Vedas, the source of revealed knowledge.” Therefore the Supreme Lord never changes. 5 Brahma continues to differentiate Sri Krsna from the changing material manifestation. He says: “O Lord, this whole cosmic manifestation is just like a flashing dream. You, however, are reality. You are not another illusory manifestation like this material cosmos.” That dreams are an unreal state of existence is described in Vedanta-sutra (2.2.29): “Reality is different from the existence perceived in dreams.” 6 Brahma continues to describe the dreamlike state of material illusion by saying ‘asta-dhisanam’ (by depriving the conditioned souls of knowledge about the Supersoul, the maya potency places them in great mental anxiety). 7 For these reasons, although it may sometimes appear to be a place of happiness, the material world is a place of intense suffering (puru-duhkha-duhkham). Furthermore, Brahma says the material world is devoid of spiritual reality (asat-svarupam). Just as the horns of a rabbit have no real existence, in the same way the illusory conceptions of material existence have no reality. Brahma also explains that although the material world is temporary and changing, it appears to be eternal (sad iva) according to the mistaken conceptions of the bewildered conditioned souls. The implication of this verse is that because the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the origin of the awareness of material existence, He is also the origin of real transcendental knowledge, and thus the supreme teacher of everyone. Another implication of this verse is that because the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the origin of the material heavenly planets, He is the reservoir of all pleasure. 8 This concludes the explanation of how the form of Sri Krsna is simultaneously all-pervading and, by the agency of His internal potency, limited within a certain space.

Anuccheda 42

1 In this way we have demonstrated that although the form of Sri Krsna may be situated within the cosmic manifestation, nevertheless, it is the resting place within which everything that exists is situated, and because it is the resting-place of everything, therefore, it is also all-pervading. Because Sri Krsna is by nature all-pervading, it is very easy for Him to expand into as many forms in as many places as He likes. An example of this is described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.69.2): “It is astounding that Lord Sri Krsna, who is one without a second, expanded Himself in sixteen thousand similar forms to marry sixteen thousand queens in their respective homes.”* 2 In this verse the words ‘citram bataitat’ mean ‘it is astounding’. One may ask: “What is so astounding?” In answer to this question, Narada Muni says “It is astounding that Sri Krsna, who is one without a second (ekah), married (udvahat) sixteen thousand queens (dvy-asta-sahasram).” Our questioner may answer: “What is so astounding about that?” In answer to this Narada says: “He married them in sixteen thousand places (grhesu).” Our unsatisfied questioner may respond: “That may be. Still, what is astounding in all this?” To this Narada may answer: “Lord Krsna did not marry them all together in one place, but He married each one of them individually (prthak).” Our questioner may answer: “That is all right. It is not possible for one husband to marry many wives one after another. Such things have occurred before.” At this point Narada says: “But Lord Krsna married all these queens at the same moment (yugapat).” Our question may say: “That’s all right. Many perfect yogis have the mystic power to expand into many forms. My dear Narada, you yourself are a great mystic yogi, worshipped by all other yogis, and therefore You know this mystic trick yourself. What can be considered to be astounding, therefore, in Lord Krsna’s expansion into many forms?” In answer to this, Narada says: “Lord Krsna’s expansion into many forms was not like the expansion of the yogis’, who can make reflections of their own form appear in many different places. These reflected forms of the yogis are not the yogis themselves, however, in the case of Lord Krsna, each one of His expansions was He Himself, and He could perform all sorts of activities in these expanded forms. In other words, these expansions of the Lord were not mere reflections of the Lord, but were the Lord Himself. Hearing this, our questioner may reply: “No. That is not possible. No one can do that.” 3 That each one of these expanded forms were not a mere reflection, but actually the Lord Himself is confirmed in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (3.3.8), where Sri Uddhava says: “All those princesses were lodged in different apartments, and the Lord simultaneously assumed different bodily expansions exactly matching each and every princess. He accepted their hands in perfect rituals by His internal potency.”* 4 In this way all objections are removed and it is clearly established that Lord Krsna can manifest His personality in any number of places at the same moment (ekena vapusa prthag yugapat). This is certainly very wonderful. This is also confirmed by Srila Sridhara Svami, who states (in his commentary on Srimad Bhagavatam 5.20.40, which is a prose description of the Supreme Personality of Godhead’s form as the predominating Deity of the sphere known as Lokaloka): “Because He is the master of all supreme powers and opulences, the Personality of Godhead can be personally present in His own form in all places simultaneously.” 5 This expansion of Lord Krsna into many personal forms simultaneously is also described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.59.42): “After defeating Indra, Krsna, the changeless Supreme Personality of Godhead arranged to marry the 16 100 girls brought from the custody of Bhaumasura. By expanding Himself in 16 100 forms, He simultaneously married them all in different palaces in one auspicious moment.”* These expansions of Lord Krsna all had bodily features that were exactly identical with Lord Krsna Himself. There was no difference, as there is in other expansion of the Lord, such as the expansion of the Lord into the form of Narayana, whose bodily features are slightly different from those of Lord Krsna. The expansion of Lord Krsna into many forms whose features are all identical with His described in the following statement of Srila Rupa Gosvami’s Sri Laghu-bhagavatamrta (1.1.21): 6 “If numerous forms, all equal in their features, are displayed simultaneously, such forms are called praksas-vigrahas of the Lord.”*

1 Lord Krsna's expansion into many forms simultaneously is also described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.69.41): "Thus Narada saw one single Krsna living in sixteen thousand palaces by His plenary expansions. Due to His inconceivable energy, He was visible in each and every individual queen's palace. In this way He demonstrated the path of sanctifying ordinary household life."* 2 These expansions of the Lord were not expansions of portions of His personality, as the incarnations of Godhead generally are, but each form was Sri Krsna in full (sarva-gehesu tam eva, ekam eva santam). This multiple appearance of the original form of the Lord is described in the Sruti-sastra in the following words: “Although the Supreme Personality of Godhead is one, He appears to have become many.” That the Lord is all-pervading is also confirmed in Srimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.13): “The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Krsna, is all-pervading. He has neither inside nor outside, for He is everywhere.” By the arrangement of Sri Krsna’s internal potency, Narada Muni was able to directly see Lord Krsna’s presence in the many palaces of Dvaraka. Narada did not speculate or guess about the Lord’s omnipresence. He directly saw it. 3 After seeing the many expansions of the original form of Sri Krsna, Narada Muni became astonished, as the Srimad Bhagavatam (10.69.42) explains: “Lord Krsna has unlimited power, and Narada Muni’s astonishment was boundless upon observing again and again the demonstration of Lord Krsna’s internal energy.”* 4 The word ‘yogamaya’ used in this verse refers to the Lord’s spiritual potency by which He can perform any impossible action. In Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.26 in the story of the Four Kumaras’ visit to Vaikunthaloka, this word is used to describe the Supreme Lord’s potency. In his commentary on that verse, Srila Sridhara Svami also confirms this explanation of the word ‘yogamaya’. 5 When Narada Muni saw these expansions of the personal form of Sri Krsna He became astonished because he understood that these expansions were not like the limited expansions manifested by an ordinary mystic yogi, but each of these expansions was the original Lord Krsna, and not a mere yogic reflection. 6 The Supreme Personality of Godhead’s personal presence everywhere is described by the following quotation from Vedic literature: “The Supersoul is all-pervading. His hands and feet are everywhere. Bhagavad-gita 13.14 and Svetasvara Upanisad 3.16 “Although the Supreme Personality of Godhead remains in His own place in the transcendental world, still He is present everywhere. Vedanta Sutra 3.2.11 (interpreted according to the commentary of Sripada Madhvacarya) “The Personality of Godhead appears as the omnipresent Supersoul. This form of the Supersoul is not different from the form of the Supreme Lord. They are the same person.” Sruti-sastra “Spiritual authorities explain that the Personality of Godhead is present in the hearts of all living entities.” Sruti-sastra 7 The Supreme Lord’s all-pervasiveness is also described in the Matsya Purana: “The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Visnu, is all-pervading. Of this there is no doubt. By His transcendental opulence He remains in His original transcendental form, and yet He appears everywhere, just as the sun which, although it remains in one place, appears to be present everywhere.” 8 That the expansion of the Supersoul is not different from the Personality of Godhead Himself is confirmed in the Vedanta-sutra (3.2.12-13): “If one says that the expansion of the Supersoul is different from the Original Personality of Godhead, he should know that statement is false. The Supersoul is the same as the Original Personality of Godhead. This is confirmed in the Sruti-sastra and all other Vedic literatures." That the Lord is not different from His expansion as the all-pervading Supersoul is also described in the following statement of Srimad-Bhagavatam (1.9.42), where Bhisma says:

1 “Now I can meditate with full concentration upon that one Lord, Sri Krsna, now present before me because now I have transcended the misconceptions of duality in regard to His presence in everyone’s heart, even in the hearts of the mental speculators. He is in everyone’s heart. The sun may be perceived differently, but the sun is one.”* 2 In this verse Bhismadeva says: “The Personality of Godhead, Sri Krsna, is now present before me (tam imam). He is present in the hearts of all conditioned souls in the form of His expansion as the all-pervading Supersoul (sarira-bhajam hrdi hrdi dhisthitam)”. The form of the Lord as the all-pervading Supersoul is also described in Srimad Bhagavatam (2.2.8): “Others conceive of the Personality of Godhead residing within the body in the region of the heart and measuring only eight inches, with four hands carrying a lotus, wheel of a chariot, a conch shell and a club respectively.”* Bhisma continues: “Although these forms of the Supersoul appear to be different from the form of the original Personality of Godhead, in truth They are not at all different from Him (ekam). Now I can meditate with full concentration on that one Lord, Sri Krsna (samadhi-gato smi). I am now aware of the all-pervading blissful form of the Supreme Lord as the Supersoul.” 3 Bhismadeva continue: “I have now transcended the misconceptions of duality in regard to His presence everywhere. Formerly I thought the forms of the Supersoul were different from each other and from other forms of the Supreme Lord, for I thought it impossible for the Lord to be all pervading. Now I am free of that illusion (vidhuta-bheda-mohah). The Supreme Lord is certainly present everywhere in His form as the Supersoul. 4 The Lord’s all-pervasiveness is described in the following words: “Sri Krsna is present in everyone’s heart, even in the hearts of the speculative philosophers (atma-kalpitanam pratidrsam). He remains within the sight of all living entities, even though they are situated in many different places.” Bhismadeva gives the example of the sun: In many different places all over the world the sun appears to be just overhead, over this tree or that wall. In reality the sun is in a single place in outer space, but still in so many places the sun seems to be just over this tree or that wall. In the same way the Supreme Personality of Godhead appears everywhere, in the hearts of all living entities, in His form of the Supersoul. The difference between the Supersoul and the sun is that the sun truly is situated in a single place far away and its omnipresence is the misunderstanding of the observers, but the Supersoul expansion of the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is, by His inconceivable potency, the Lord Himself, and thus the Lord Himself is truly present everywhere. Bhismadeva continues: "Now I can meditate with full concentration (samadhi-gato smi) upon that one Lord, Sri Krsna, now present before me (tam imam), whom I have described in the previous prayers. The Supreme Lord is present in the hearts of all conditioned souls (sarira-bhajam hrdi hrdi). Although the Lord is generally all-pervading in his four-armed Supersoul form, I now see Him everywhere in His two-armed form of Sri Krsna, which is supremely powerful and is now present before me. No other form is equal to the form of Sri Krsna." 5 In this verse the word 'bheda' refers to the Supreme Lord's presence in many places. It does not refer to the Lord's perfection or imperfection. In Srimad Bhagavatam 1.9.30-43 Bhismadeva glorified the transcendental form of the Lord. These prayers clearly do not glorify the impersonal Brahman aspect of the Supreme. In this way we have now described how the Supreme Personality of Godhead is manifested within a limited area of space, and yet is also all-pervading, present within the hearts of all moving and non-moving creatures.

1 Thus we have proved that the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is eternal and all-pervading. This is also explained in the following verse from Sridhara Svami's commentary (8.6.8.): "In this verse, by saying that although the Personality of Godhead is unborn, he repeatedly appears in the forms of His incarnations, Brahma clearly establishes the eternality and omnipresence of the Supreme Lord's transcendental form."
2 The eternality and all-pervasiveness of the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in Srimad Bhagavatam (8.6.8-9) where Lord Brahma says: "Although You are never born, Your appearance and disappearance as an incarnation never cease. You are always free from the material qualities, and You are the shelter of transcendental bliss resembling an ocean. Eternally existing in Your transcendental form, You are the supreme subtle of the most extremely subtle. We therefore offer our respectful obeisances unto You, the Supreme, whose existence is inconceivable.* 3 “O best of persons, O supreme director, those who actually aspire for supreme good fortune worship this form of Your Lordship according to the Vedic Tantras. My Lord, we can see all the three worlds in You.”* 4 Sridhara Svami comments: “In this verse Brahma says: ‘O Lord, Your appearance in this material world and Your pastimes are not like our birth and activities.’ How are the Lord’s appearance and activities different from those of the conditioned soul? Brahma gives the answer in the word ‘agunaya’ (O Lord, You are always free from the material qualities) and ‘nirvana-sukharnavaya’ (O Lord, You are the shelter of transcendental bliss resembling an ocean). 5 In this verse Brahma says although the Personality of Godhead is smaller than the atom (anor animne), He is also so large that no one can measure Him (paraiganya-dhama). This should not be considered impossible because, as Brahma explains, the powers and opulences of the Personality of Godhead are inconceivable (mahanubhavaya). In these words Brahma proves that the form of the Personality of Godhead is eternal and inconceivable. 6 “Brahma continues: ‘O best of persons (purusarsabha), those who actually aspire for good fortune (sreyo-rthibhih) worship (ijyam) this form (rupam etat) of Your Lordship (tava) according to the Vedic Tantras (vaidika-tantrikena)’. In this way Brahma described the exalted transcendental nature of the form of the Personality of Godhead. From this we may understand that the Lord’s appearance in this material world is not like the material birth of the conditioned souls. 7 “At this point someone may object: ‘The demigods are also worshipable. Why is it not thought that the birth of the demigods is also transcendental and non-material like that of the Personality of Godhead?’ To this I reply: True, the demigods are worshipable. Still, they are not equal to the Personality of Godhead, for they are all situated within the universal form of the Personality of Godhead, as Brahma says: ‘My Lord, we can see (pasyami) that all the three worlds (tri-lokam) and we demigods and living entities as well (nah) are all situated within Your universal form (visva-murtau). Your transcendental form, therefore, is limitless, and we are clearly Your inferiors.’” 8 In Srimad Bhagavatam 8.6.8. Brahma metaphorically described the Personality of Godhead as ‘an ocean of transcendental bliss’ (nirvana-sukharnavaya). In this way Brahma explained that the bliss of realising the personal form of God is superior to the happiness of realising His impersonal aspect (nirvana). This is also described by Dhruva Maharaja in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.9.10): 9 “My Lord, the transcendental bliss derived from meditating upon Your lotus feet or hearing about Your glories from pure devotees is so unlimited that it is far beyond the stage of brahmananda wherein one thinks himself merged in the impersonal Brahman as one with the Supreme. Since brahmananda is also defeated by the transcendental bliss derived from devotional service, then what to speak of the temporary blissfulness of elevating oneself to the heavenly planets, which is ended by the separating sword of time? Although one may be elevated to the heavenly planets, he falls down in due course of time."* 10 In Srimad Bhagavatam 8.6.8 Brahma said that the Personality of Godhead is smaller than the atom, and at the same time He is so large that no one can measure Him. This is possible because the Lord is the master of all inconceivable potencies. Brahma then said to the Lord: "O Lord, everything is resting within You." 11 "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is neither demigod nor demon, neither human nor bird or beast. He is not woman, man, or neuter, nor is He an animal. He is not a material quality, a fruitive activity, a manifestation or non manifestation. He is the last word in the discrimination of 'not this, not this', and He is unlimited. All glories to the Supreme Personality of Godhead!"* 12 "When the King of the elephants was describing the supreme authority, without mentioning any particular person, he did not invoke the demigods, headed by Lord Brahma, Lord Siva, Indra and Candra. Thus none of them approached him. However, because Lord Hari is the Supersoul, Purusottama, the Personality of Godhead, He appeared before Gajendra."* 13 Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the original cause of all causes, no demigod or other living entity can be His equal. This is confirmed by Gajendra in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 8.3.22-23): "The Supreme Personality of Godhead creates His minor part and parcels, the jiva-tattva, beginning with Lord Brahma, the demigods and the expansions of Vedic knowledge (Sama, Rg, Yajur and Atharva) and including all other living entities, moving and non moving, with their different names and characteristics. As the sparks of a fire or the shining rays of the sun emanate from their source and merge into it again and again, the mind, the intelligence, the senses, the gross and subtle material bodies, and the continuous transformations of the different modes of nature all emanate from the Lord and again merge into Him."* Gajendra continues by explaining that the Supreme Personality of Godhead has no material qualities. "He is not woman, man, or neuter, nor is He an animal. He is not a material quality, a mode of material nature, a pious or impious fruitive activity." He is not any of these things because He is the creator of them and therefore He is not different from them. We may also note that the phrase 'na san na casat' may be interpreted to mean "He is neither small nor large." This means that He can appear in any form, large or small, as he wishes. Sridhara Svami comments on this verse: "The word 'nisedha-sesah' means 'negating the different material forms fashioned by the illusory energy, maya, one may understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is not a product of maya.' In this verse Gajendra says: 'All glories to the Supreme Personality of Godhead! I pray He may appear before me so I may become free from this distressing situation and attain liberation.'" 14 In Srimad Bhagavatam 8.3.30 (quoted in text 13) Sukadeva Gosvami says: "When the king of the elephants was describing (upavarnita) the supreme authority, without mentioning any particular person (nirvisesam), he did not invoke the demigods, headed by Lord Brahma, Lord Siva, Indra and Candra (vividha-linga-bhidabhimanah). Thus none of them approached him (naite yadopasasrpuh). However, because Lord Hari is the Supersoul (nikhilatmakatvat), Purusottama, the Personality of Godhead (akhilamara-mayo harih), He appeared (avirasit) before Gajendra."* In these prayers Gajendra said: 'O Lord, Your transcendental form is neither large nor small, for it is never limited by material designations.' In the same way in other places of Vedic literature it is said that the Personality of Godhead has neither hands nor feet. In this way the transcendentalists meditate on the Lord in their heart. This, of course, means that the Personality of Godhead has no material hands and feet, for all the limbs of the Lord's body are spiritual. This is confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.14.2), where Lord Brahma says: "My dear Lord, Your form is transcendental to all material elements. I can understand that You have mercy upon me because You are revealing that form, standing before me like a small child. But although I am Lord Brahma, the so-called creator of this universe, I am unable to ascertain the transcendental potencies of Your body. And if I am unable to understand the spiritual potency of Your childlike body, then what can I understand about Your transcendental pastimes?"* Many other verses from Vedic literature confirm this point, but to avoid undue repetition we will not quote them.

1 The Supreme Personality of Godhead's presence as the Supersoul in the hearts of all conditioned souls is described by Maharaja Nrga (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.64.26): "My dear Lord, You are the Supersoul seated in everyone's heart. There are many great mystic yogis who have eyes to see You through the Vedas and Upanisads. In order to achieve the elevated position of being equal in quality with You, they always meditate on You within their hearts. Although such exalted saintly persons may see You constantly within their hearts, they still cannot see You eye to eye: therefore I am very much surprised that I am able to see You personally. I know that I was engaged in so many activities, especially as a king. Although I was in the midst of luxury and opulence and was subjected to so much of the happiness and misery of material existence, I am so fortunate to be seeing You personally. As far as I know, when one become liberated from material existence, he can see You in this way."* 2 Sridhara Svami comments: "In this verse Maharaja Nrga says to the Supreme Personality of Godhead: 'O Lord, I am very much surprised that I am able to see You personally' (sa tvam katham mama vibho ksi-pathah). Someone may ask: Why is this so surprising? In answer to this Maharaja Nrga says: 'O Lord, You are the Supersoul (paramatma) seated in everyone's heart. There are many great mystic yogis (yogesvaraih) who have eyes to see You though the Vedas and Upanisads (sruti-drsa) and they always meditate on You within their pure hearts (amala-hrd-vibhavyah). Although such exalted saintly persons may see You constantly within their hearts, they still cannot see You eye to eye, for You remain beyond the perception of the material senses (adhoksajah). When one becomes liberated from material existence (bhavapavargah), he can see You as I am seeing You now (anudrsya). Although my intelligence has become blinded by the great suffering I have experienced in this lifetime as a lizard, I have become so fortunate as to see You personally. This is certainly very surprising.'" 3 The reason Maharaja Nrga was able to directly see the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in the Narayanadhyatma: "Although the Supreme Personality of Godhead remains always invisible to the conditioned souls, He may be seen by the intervention of the Lord's transcendental potency. Without the mercy of the Lord's potency, who is able to see the eternal Supreme Lord?" 4 The Supreme Personality of Godhead can be seen only with the grace of His own potency, which He manifests by His own mercy. Therefore, the Lord's mercy is the actual cause of being able to see Him. This is confirmed in the following statements of the Upanisad: "With material eyes no one can see the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead." Katha Upanisad 2.3.9 "The Supreme Personality of Godhead reveals Himself of His own accord to those He chooses." Mundaka Upanisad 3.2.3 "The conditioned living entity is not able to see the Supreme Personality of Godhead." Katha Upanisad 2.3.9 and Svetasvatara Upanisad 4.20 5 This is also explained in the Narayaniya chapter of the Moksa-dharma (Mahabharata, Santi-parva 339.45-46), where Lord Narayana, the master of Svetadvipa says to Narada: "O Narada, I am the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the master of the universe. You are not able to completely understand My transcendental form. Because I desired to reveal Myself to you I have momentarily appeared before you and then disappeared. You are no longer able to see Me, but can only see this material nature of the three modes and various elements I have created. At the present moment you can see only this. You cannot see Me." 6 In this verse Lord Narayana says "You have seen My form (drsyate), but you have not understood it (tvaya na jneyam)'. By saying that His form cannot be understood within the reference of matter, the Lord affirms that His form is spiritual and not material. Nevertheless, because the Lord desires to show mercy to His devotees, He sometimes wishes (icchan) to reveal His form to them, and then He also disappears from heir sight (nasyeyam). Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the supreme controller (isah) of everything, He is supremely independent, and He is also different from the material universe. For this reason He can appear and then disappear whenever He likes. The phrases 'maya hy esa maya srsta yan mam pasyasi' and 'sarva-bhuta-guanir yuktam' means 'Now you do not see Me. Now you see only My illusory energy." 7 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead may be seen only by His mercy is confirmed by Bhismadeva (Mahabharata, Santi-parva 339.12): "The eternal Supreme Personality of Godhead, the master of the demigods, then became pleased and personally revealed Himself to Upacari Vasu. This is the only way He may be seen. If He does not wish to show Himself, He will remain invisible." In this verse the word 'tam' refers to Upacari Vasu. 8 Before this passage a group of devotees headed by Upacari Vasu says (Mahabharata, Santi-parva 336.19): "O Brhaspati, neither you nor we are able to see the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Only they who obtain His mercy can see Him." 9 The various attributes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, such as His remaining invisible to the eyes of the conditioned souls, are described in the Upanisads. For example, the Katha Upanisad (2.3.9) says: "With material eyes no one can see the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead." The verse quoted in the beginning of this Anuccheda was spoken by King Nrga to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 47

1 In the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (8.3.8) the conception that the forms, qualities, and pastimes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are material is refuted. Here the Lord's forms are described as spiritual and not material: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead has no material birth, activities, name, form, qualities or faults. To fulfil the purpose for which this material world is created and destroyed, He comes in the form of a human being like Lord Rama or Lord Krsna by His original internal potency."* 2 This verse describes the various transformations present in the material bodies of the conditioned souls. The first transformation is birth (janma), the next transformation is work (karma), by which the imperfect and unfulfilled soul tries to become perfect and fulfilled. The next transformation is name (nama), or the system of sounds by which various objects within the mind's reach are indicated for the purpose of facilitating everyday activities. The next transformation is form (rupa), the quality perceived by the visual sense. The last transformation is quality (guna), or the conditioned souls' different natures, born from their contact with the three modes: goodness, passion and ignorance. The material transformations are present in the conditioned souls, but they are not present in the Supreme Personality of Godhead because He is always situated in His own original transcendental form, which is perfect and complete, beyond the understanding of the limited material mind, beyond the touch of the material energy, and visible only by the Lord's consent and not otherwise. Although the Lord remains untouched by the material transformations, He nevertheless comes to the material world in a human like form like the forms of Lord Rama or Lord Krsna (yas tani rcchanti). The sentence begun in this verse is completed in the next which says: "He has immense potency, and in various forms, all free from material contamination, He acts wonderfully. He is therefore the Supreme Brahman. I offer my respects to Him."* That the Supreme Personality of Godhead has no material form is also described in the following statements from the Upanisads: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is perfect and complete. He is supremely peaceful. His activities are never material." Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.19 "The Supreme Personality of Godhead has no material name or form. He is eternal and changeless. He is not understood by the material senses." Katha Upanisad 1.3.15 Although He has no material attributes, the Supreme Personality of Godhead has a spiritual form and senses. This is confirmed in the following words: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is omnipotent. He can do whatever He likes. All His desires are automatically fulfilled. He tastes and smells all that exists. His senses perceive everything." Chandogya Upanisad 3.14.2 4 In this verse the word 'guna-dosah' means that although they who are not Supreme may have faults, the Supreme Personality of Godhead has no faults. This is described in Kurma Purana: "Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead is full of all opulences, some of His opulences may seem to contradict some of His other opulences. Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead is supreme in all respects, these contradictions should not be taken as faults." 5 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is perfect and free from any defect is also confirmed in the following statements of the Upanisads: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead remains always untouched by material impurity or sin." Chandogya Upanisad 8.1.5. "The Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is described in the Vedas, is supremely auspicious because not only does He possess all inauspiciousness within Himself, but He also leads others to an auspicious condition." Chandogya Upanisad 4.15.2-4 6 In the previously quoted passage from Chandogya Upanisad (3.14.2) the word 'sarva-gandhah' may also be interpreted to mean "He who is most pleasantly fragrant', or, in other words, He whose attributes are superior to those of all others. In the verse from Srimad Bhagavatam (8.3.8) quoted previously, the word 'rcchati' (He accepts) should not be interpreted to mean that He accepts a position like the faulty status of the conditioned souls. Such an interpretation would clearly contradict the statements of the Upanisads. 7 At this point someone may object: "First you say the Supreme Personality of Godhead has no birth, activities, name, form, or qualities, and then again you say he has all these. This is certainly a contradictory statement." Fearing that someone would say this, the Srimad Bhagavatam (8.3.8) says: "By the power of His original internal potency (sva-maya) the Supreme Personality of Godhead takes birth, even though He is unborn." Without accepting the Lord's all-powerful internal potency, it is indeed illogical to say the Lord simultaneously takes birth and does not take birth. In fact the birth of the Supreme Lord is different from the birth of the conditioned souls. The Lord's birth is a spiritual pastime and cannot be understood from the material frame of reference or described according to material concepts. 8 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead does have birth, name, form, activities, and qualities is confirmed by Sankaracarya in the following words (sariraka-bhasya 1.4.16): "The word 'sat' (reality) is generally applied to that which has names and forms. Considering that some philosophers might think the Supreme godhead ultimately has neither name nor form, the Sruti-sastra specifically says: 'Before the creation, the Supreme existed as sat (reality). Other things were then non existent (asat). This means that by using the word 'sat' to describe the Supreme before the creation, the Sruti-sastra affirms that before the creation of the material universes the Supreme Godhead was manifested with both name and form, for the very word 'sat' means to have name and form." 9 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead has spiritual qualities but no material qualities is confirmed by the following seemingly contradictory statements of Visnu Purana (6.5.83-84): "O sage, the Supreme Godhead is above all virtues and faults. These things are not present in Him." "The Supreme Godhead is the possessor of all auspicious qualities." 10 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead has spiritual, not material, qualities is also described in the following words (Visnu Purana 6.5.79): "The person that has all knowledge, power, strength, opulence, heroism and splendour, and does not have any inferior material qualities, or faults is known as Bhagavan, or the Supreme Personality of Godhead." 11 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead has spiritual, not material, qualities is again confirmed by the following statement of Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda: "When the Vedic literatures describe the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the controller of all the universes, as being without qualities (nirguna), this should be understood to mean that He has no inferior material qualities." 12 In Srimad Bhagavatam 8.3.8 the word 'sva-mayaya' should be interpreted to mean 'The Supreme Personality of Godhead who appears in this material world through the agency of His own transcendental potency.' This phrase should not be interpreted in any other way. That this interpretation is correct is confirmed by the following statement of Narada Muni in Srimad Bhagavatam (10.37.22), which clearly defines the word 'maya' as 'the Lord's potency": "My Lord, let me offer my respectful obeisances to Your lotus feet. You are situated completely in the transcendental position of perfect knowledge and bliss. You are complete in Yourself, and are beyond all desires. By exhibiting Your internal potency You have set up the influence of maya. Your unlimited potency cannot be measured by anyone. My dear Lord, You are the Supreme Controller. It is simply vain to think that You are dependent on any of Your creations."* 13 Any other interpretation of the word 'sva-mayaya' should be understood to contradict the intention of Srila Sukadeva Gosvami in speaking Srimad Bhagavatam 12.12.69. In this verse and also in Sridhara Svami's commentary on it, the word 'sva-mayaya' is clearly defined to mean 'the Lord's transcendental potency." 14 Someone may object: In this verse the word 'rcchati' means 'accepts'. This means that the Supreme Personality of Godhead sometimes accepts a form, and at other times He does not accept a form. To this objection Srimad Bhagavatam replies by using the word 'anukalam' (eternally). In other words, Srimad Bhagavatam states that the Supreme Lord eternally accepts a form. He never abandons the position of having His own transcendental form. In other words, He is never formless. Therefore, it may be understood that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the origin of His transcendental potencies, and at the same time He manifests His eternal form within the material world by the agency of His transcendental potency. 15 At this point someone may object: "How is it possible that the birth and activities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are eternal. He is not eternally being born, neither is He eternally carrying out any specific action. His expansions appear at a certain point in time, and then after that They are no longer manifest. How is it, then, that you say that the Lord's birth and activities are eternal?" To this objection I reply: There is no defect in the statement that the birth and pastimes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are eternal. He has innumerable forms and each form is manifest in an unlimited number of places. The Lord's birth and activities are therefore unlimited in number. The original forms and secondary manifestations of the Lord's various places of pastimes and various pastime-associates in both the spiritual world of Vaikuntha and the material universes are also unlimited in number. Therefore, whenever the birth or pastimes of any original form of the Lord or secondary manifestation of the Lord's form is completed in a certain place, it is immediately manifested again in another place. In this way the birth and pastimes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are never interrupted. They are eternally manifest. The original manifestations of the Supreme Personality of Godhead's births and pastimes are always the same. They never change. The secondary appearances of these original forms, however, sometimes introduce varieties into these pastimes. 16 That the original forms of the Lord can expand into innumerable secondary forms is confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.69.2): "It is astounding that Lord Krsna, who is one without a second, expanded Himself in sixteen thousand similar forms to marry sixteen thousand queens in their respective homes."* 17 The Supreme Personality of Godhead, therefore, manifests various forms in various circumstances according to His different activities. In this way the varieties of the mellows of His pastimes are manifested. 18 At this point someone may object: "How can you say that simply because He is born and acts in different forms at different times, the birth and activities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are eternal? These births and activities are different, and therefore none of them are eternal. For this reason the form of the Personality of Godhead is also not eternal." To this I reply: The forms of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are one. They appear at different times and under different circumstances, but they are still the same eternal forms. That they appear at different times does not mean that they must be different forms. If something is repeated that does not mean that the repetition is different from the first appearance. This is explained by Sankaracarya in Sariraka-bhasya: "If the word 'cow' is repeated twice that does not mean that there are two cows. There is only one cow, but for emphasis the word has been repeated. In the same way, if the word 'cooked' is repeated twice, that does not mean that the food was twice cooked. Simply for emphasis the word was repeated." From these explanations we may understand that the birth and activities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are eternal. For this reason the Agama-sastras and other Vedic literatures worship the Supreme Personality of Godhead's pastimes, which were all performed innumerable times in the past. 19 This is also confirmed in Madhvacaraya's commentary: "Because the forms of Lord Trivikrama and the other incarnations are all manifested from the form of the Supersoul (paramatma), therefore these forms are all eternal, just as the Supersoul is eternal." This is also corroborated by the Sruti-sastra: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead always existed in the past. He exists at present, and He will continue to exist in the future eternally." From this it should be known that because the forms of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are all eternal, they are also the supreme objects of our worship. 20 The 'birth' of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is very different from the birth of the conditioned souls. Any similarities of these two births are very superficial. Sometimes the Lord's 'birth' is completely different from the conditioned souls birth and there is not even a superficial resemblance. That the Supreme Lord is unborn although He seems to take birth is described in the Sruti-sastra: "Although He is unborn, the Supreme Personality of Godhead takes birth again and again." 21 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead's appearance in this material world only superficially resembles the birth of the conditioned souls is confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.3.8): "Then the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Visnu, who is situated in the core of everyone's heart, appeared from the heart of Devaki in the dense darkness of night, like the full moon rising on the eastern horizon, because Devaki was of the same category as Sri Krsna."* 22 The difference between the Lord's 'birth' and that of the conditioned souls is also seen in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (7.8.17), where the Lord's appearance as Lord Nrsimadeva is described: "To prove that the statement of His servant Prahlada Maharaja was substantial - in other words, to prove that the Supreme Lord is present everywhere, even within the pillar of an assembly hall - the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Hari, exhibited a wonderful form never before seen. The form was neither that of a man nor that of a lion. Thus the Lord appeared in His wonderful form in the assembly hall."* 23 The 'birth' of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is again described in Srimad Bhagavatam (3.24.6): "After many, many years, the Supreme Personality of Godhead Madhusudana, the killer of the demon Madhu, having entered the semen of Kardama, appeared in Devahuti just as fire comes from wood in a sacrifice."* In this description of the Lord's 'birth' we may note that, influenced by the pure devotion of Kardama Muni, the Supreme Lord agreed to become his son. We may also note that the word 'viryam' here may be understood to mean 'sonship'. In this way the phrase 'viryam apannah' may mean 'The Supreme Lord accepted the status of Kardama Muni's son.' 24 The activities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are His blissful transcendental pastimes. They are not like the material activities of the conditioned souls. This is described in Vedanta-sutra (2.1.33): "Although they may superficially resemble the activities of conditioned souls, the actions of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are all His transcendental pastimes." Sripada Madhvacarya comments on this sutra: "The transcendental pastimes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are different from the happy dancing and other activities of the intoxicated and mad conditioned souls, who inhabit this material world." 25 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is never forced to act is described in the Narayana-samhita: "Lord Hari is not obliged to create the material universes or do any other thing. He is completely free to do whatever He likes. As a madman or an intoxicated person freely dances without thinking of attaining any specific result to fulfilling any duty, so the Supreme Personality of Godhead, impelled by His own transcendental bliss, acts in any way He pleases. "How has the idea come that the perfectly blissful Supreme Personality of Godhead is obliged to act in certain ways and is not free to act as He pleases? This idea is a great mistake, for if even the liberated jivas are free to act and have all their desires automatically fulfilled, then certainly the Supreme Lord is completely free. All His desires are automatically fulfilled without His having to endeavour in any way." 26 One should not conclude from this example comparing the Supreme Personality of Godhead to an intoxicated person or a madman that the Supreme Lord is not omniscient or that His knowledge is faulty in any way, as the knowledge of a madman or an intoxicated person is. The example should be understood to mean that there are some similarities between the actions of the Supreme Lord and an intoxicated person, but they are not the same in all respects. As a madman or an intoxicated person does not consider what is necessary for his personal benefit, but acts irresponsibly, so the Supreme Lord does not consider His own self-interest, for He is already flooded with transcendental bliss. The Supreme Lord's transcendental bliss is automatically established. He need not work to attain it. Someone may say this is a lack of awareness on the Lord's part: that He does not know how His bliss is established. However, for the Lord this is not a fault. As even the most learned scholar is not considered ignorant because he is not aware how he is inhaling and exhaling in deep sleep or some other unconscious state, so there is no fault on the Lord's part if He is not aware how His transcendental bliss is established. From this we may conclude that the pastimes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are by nature full of transcendental bliss. This is confirmed by the Sruti-sastra: "By nature the Supreme Personality of Godhead's desires are automatically fulfilled without His endeavour. If this is so, and He never lacks anything, then how is it possible for Him to desire anything? His desires do not remain for they are all immediately and effortlessly fulfilled." 27 Even when He creates the material world, the Supreme Personality of Godhead performs everything without any effort, all His desires being automatically fulfilled. This is described in Aitareya Upanisad (1.1.1): "The Supreme Personality of Godhead glanced and thought: 'Let there be creation'. In this way the material world was created." If the Lord's desires in relation to this material world are automatically fulfilled, then what to speak of His desires in relation to the spiritual world of Vaikuntha? In either spiritual or material worlds, then, the Supreme Lord can perform any action simply by willing it. This is described by the Kaliya serpent's wives (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.16.47): "Our dear Lord, in the matter of creating the cosmic manifestation, personally You have nothing to exert; by expanding Your different kinds of energy - namely the mode of goodness, the mode of passion, and the mode of ignorance - You can create, maintain and annihilate this cosmic manifestation. As the controller of the entire time force, You can simply glance over the material energy, create this universe, and energise the different forces of material nature, which are acting differently in different creatures. No one can estimate, therefore, how Your activities are going on within this world."* 28 The transcendental nature of the Supreme Lord's appearance and activities is also described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (1.3.35): "Thus learned men describe the births and activities of the unborn and inactive, which is undiscoverable even in the Vedic literatures. He is the Lord of the heart."* 29 This verse may be understood by studying the two preceding verses, which describe the process by which one becomes able to understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead. These two verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.3.33-34) say: "Whenever a person experiences, b self-realisation, that both the gross and subtle bodies have nothing to do with the pure self, at that time he sees himself as well as the Lord.* "If the illusory energy subsides and the living entity becomes full enriched with knowledge by the grace of the Lord, then he becomes at once enlightened with self-realisation and thus becomes situated in his own glory."* The first verse means that becoming free, by full spiritual knowledge, from the ignorance of thinking that the gross and subtle material bodies are the self, is the cause of being able to see the Lord. The second verse means that when the illusory energy subsides the great treasure of one's own spiritual form becomes manifest. The third verse (1.3.35) means that the learned men, who take pleasure in the Supreme Self, describe the births and activities of the Supersoul, who is the Lord of the heart. When material misconceptions subside, then the transcendental treasure of direct perception of the Lord's birth and activities becomes manifest. This is the meaning. From this it may be understood that the Lord's forms and pastimes are filled with transcendental bliss. That is the meaning. 30 In this verse (1.3.35) the phrase 'akartur ajanasya' (the Lord has neither birth nor activities) should be understood to mean 'the Lord has no material birth or activities.' His birth and activities are completely spiritual and different from their material counterparts. The phrase 'veda-guhyani' (undiscoverable even in the Vedic literatures) is explained in Akrura's prayers (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.48.23-24): "To consider Your Lordship to be one of us, conditioned by the material nature, is a mistake due to our imperfect knowledge. When people deviate from the original knowledge of the Vedas, they try to identify the ordinary living entities with Your Lordship. Your Lordship has appeared on this earth in Your original form in order to re-establish the real knowledge that the living entities are neither one with nor equal to the Supreme God. My dear Lord, You are always situated in uncontaminated goodness (suddha-sattva). Your appearance is necessary to re-establish actual Vedic knowledge, as opposed to the atheistic philosophy that tries to establish that God and the living entities are one and the same. My dear Lord Krsna, this time You have appeared in the home of Vasudeva as his son, along with Your plenary expansion, Sri Balarama. Your mission is to kill all the atheistic royal families along with their huge military strength. You have advented Yourself to minimise the overburden of the world, and in order to fulfil this mission. You have glorified the dynasty of Yadu, appearing in the family as one of its members."* Sridhara Svami discusses these verses in his commentary: "Someone may say that the pastimes of the Lord are actually manifestations of material illusion and they only appear to be spiritual under the influence of devotion to the Lord as a glittering oyster-shell may sometimes be mistaken for silver. This is not a fact. The Supreme Lord's pastimes are spiritual. They are not the ordinary activities of conditioned souls, but the Supreme Godhead's sport. This is confirmed by the description given in these two verses of Srimad Bhagavatam. 31 As the Supreme Lord's form is transcendental, so His names and activities are also transcendental. This is described in Visnu Purana (5.2.18) where the demigods say to Devaki-devi: "O Devaki, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Visnu, whose names, forms, and activities are beyond the limited understanding of the conditioned souls, is now present within your womb." We may note that some manuscripts contain the reading 'rupa-karma' (forms and activities) in the beginning of this verse. (In this alternate version the translation would read: 'whose forms and activities', omitting the word 'names'). 32 The transcendental nature of the Supreme Personality of Godhead's pastimes is also described in Bhagavad-gita (4.9) where the Lord says: "One who knows the transcendental nature of My appearance and activities does not, upon leaving the body, take birth again in this world, but attains My eternal abode, O Arjuna."* 33 The name of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is perfect and transcendental. It is different from the material nature and it cannot be described in material words or understood by the thinking process of the material mind. This is described in the following statement of the Vasudevadhyatma: "Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead has limitless qualities, He is known as 'anama', or 'He who has no name'. The Lord is said to have no name because He does not have a single name. In other words, His names are unlimited in number." 34 This is also described in the Brahma Purana: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is sometimes said to be nameless. This is said because the names of the Lord are unlimited in number. There is no single name of the Lord. In the same way, the Supreme Lord is sometimes said to be formless. This should be understood to mean that the form of the Supreme Lord is spiritual. It is not composed of the five material elements. Therefore the Lord has no material form." 35 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead's names and pastimes are spiritual and not material is also confirmed in the Visnu Purana (5.18.53-54): "O unborn Supreme Personality of Godhead, Your names, birth, forms and so forth, are not the product of the vivid imagination of the conditioned souls, but they are all supremely real. You are eternal, the unchanging, supreme spiritual reality. You are the supreme knowledge beyond the feeble speculative powers of the conditioned souls, and therefore You are glorified by a host of holy names, such as Krsna (the all-attractive), Acyuta (the infallible), Ananta (the unlimited), and Visnu (the all-pervading)." 36 This description of the Lord's holy names does not at all contradict the verse from the Visnu Purana quoted in text 31. Both passages describe the spiritual nature of the Lord's holy name. The speculative powers of the conditioned souls cannot give certain knowledge, and therefore this verse explains that the Supreme Personality of Godhead's name, birth and pastimes cannot be understood by the speculative process. In this verse the word 'brahma' clearly establishes the spiritual nature of the Lord's holy name. 37 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is unborn is confirmed in the Svetasvatara Upanisad (4.5): "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is unborn. He appears in the red, white and black forms of His different incarnations." Because the names, forms and pastimes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are all eternal, unborn and supremely worshipable, they cannot be the product of philosophers' imaginations. They are not imaginary. They are real. This is also confirmed in the statement of Visnu Purana (5.2.18) quoted in text 31. The Lord's holy names, such as Krsna and other names and His incarnations, where He appears in the forms of demigods, human beings, ksatriyas and others, and His pastimes in these different incarnations are not imaginary. They are all real. All the pastime-incarnations of the Lord are the masters of His eternal spiritual potencies, and they are all perfect in all respects. This is confirmed in Srimad Bhagavatam (10.37.32): "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is, by nature, perfect in all respects." 38 In the Visnu Purana passage quoted in Text 35 the word 'yatah' means 'because' and 'tatah' means 'therefore'. 'Sarvasya arthasya' means 'of all visible substance', 'kalpanam rte' means 'beyond conception or imagination', 'adhigamah' means 'material conception', and 'na' means 'is not'. This verse explains that neither the Supreme Personality of Godhead nor His holy name are imaginary, but they are beyond the information gathering abilities of the conditioned souls in the material world. The great sages and the Vedic literatures both glorify the Supreme Personality of Godhead by chanting His supremely perfect transcendental names. These glories of the Lord are not imaginary. They are real. That is the meaning of this verse. 39 In this way the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in the Vedic literatures. It has already been established that the potencies of the Lord are all self-perfect. Other things may be products of philosophers' imagination, but not the Lord's perfect potencies. In this verse the Visnu Purana clearly says: "The names, birth, and everything else in relation to the Supreme Personality of Godhead are not imaginary (na vidyante nama-jaty-adi-kalpanah) for they are in relation to You, O Lord (bhavan), the Supreme form of the supreme spirit (paramam brahma)'. The use of the word 'avikari' (unchanging) does not mean that the Lord remains static and does not move or act, for He always enjoys various transcendental pastimes. The word 'aja' (O unborn) means that He does not take birth or appear in the world as a conditioned souls does. Why do some commentators claim that the names, births, etc., of the Supreme Lord are imaginary? Their conclusion cannot be accepted, Material knowledge is attained by the process of mental speculation (kalpanam rte rthasya sarvasyadhigamah). Mental speculation, however, does not help us understand the names, birth, etc. of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The verse concludes by saying: 'O Lord, You are glorified (idyase) by Your holy names (namabhih), such as Krsna and other names', which are all chanted by the eternally perfect Vedic literatures, such as the Sruti-sastras and the Puranas. The conclusion is that the Supreme Godhead is not impersonal, and His names, birth, form, etc. are not imaginary. They are all real. 40 The names Krsna, Acyuta, Ananta, and Visnu in this verse are selected to give some indication of the Lord's innumerable names. In the Vedic literatures the name of Narayana and many other names are also given. 41 The Lord's holy name is described in the Vedic literature: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is manifest as the syllables of His name." The Vedanta-sutra (2.4.16) also says: "The holy name of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is eternal." In this way the eternality of the Lord's holy name, which is described in all Vedic literatures, is established. 42 The holy names of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are also described in the Gopala-tapani Upanisad (1.29) where, in the course of describing the 18 syllable Krsna-mantra, the demigod Brahma says: “When I desired to create the universe the Lord again appeared before me, showing me in these syllables the universe that was to be.” In this way the holy names of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are described as the original cause of the material universe then about to be created. The Lord’s holy name is not different from His form. Because the Lord and His name are the same, the Lord’s name is different from the universe, although it is also the universe’s original cause. Because it is different from the universe, the Lord’s name is spiritual and all-perfect. It is without flaw. 43 The Lord’s holy name is also described in the Rg Veda (1.156.3): “O Visnu, by chanting Your holy name with a little understanding, we attain profound transcendental knowledge.” 44 In this verse word ‘visno’ means ‘O Visnu’, ‘te’ means “Your’, ‘cit’ means ‘spiritual by nature’, ‘mahah’ means ‘self-manifest’, ‘asya’ means ‘of that holy name’, and ‘a’ means ‘even slightly’. When it is said, ‘with even a small understanding of Your holy name’, it is understood that complete understanding of the glories of the Lord’s name is the best position. The word ‘viviktan’ means ‘even by simply repeating the syllables’, ‘sumatim’ means ‘proper knowledge of the holy name’, ‘bhajamahe’ means ‘we obtain’, ‘tat’ means ‘therefore’, ‘om’ means ‘the sacred syllable om’, and ‘sat’ means ‘self-perfect’. From this we may understand that the chanting of te holy name of the Supreme Personality of Godhead frees the chanter from fear, hatred and other material imperfections. This description is also confirmed by various other statements of the Vedic literatures. 45 That one becomes liberated by the chanting of the holy name of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is also described in the Brahma Purana: “Even if one’s mind is distracted and one does not think of the Lord, and even if one becomes angry, if one continually glorifies Lord Hari, he will become free from the bonds of repeated birth and death and attain liberation as Sisupala, the King of Cedi, did.” 46 One becomes liberated by even only once chanting the holy name of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is described in Padma Purana: “A person who chants the two syllables Ha-ri, even if he chants only a single time, causes his friends and relatives to become liberated from the cycle of repeated birth and death by such chanting.”* 47 The sacred syllable om is described in the Sruti-sastra: “Om is the name of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Because speaking it rescues one from the cycle of repeated birth and death, om is known as ‘tara’ (the deliverer).” 48 One should not invent a concocted interpretation of the meaning of the holy name. “To concoct a fanciful meaning of the holy name of Lord Hari” is counted among the offenses to the holy name mentioned in the Padma Purana. Even if one regularly chants the holy name of the Lord, if he commits this or other offenses to the holy name, he will not become liberated as a result of his chanting, but will remain enmeshed in the cycle of repeated birth and death. This is true of one who commits offenses to the Lord’s holy name and it is also true of one who commits offenses to the Lord’s devotional service. An example of an offense to devotional service is found in the Sri Visnu-bhakti-candrodaya: “If one sees the Supreme Personality of Godhead travelling in His Rathayatra festival or some similar festival and does not follow the Lord in His procession, then such a person will find that the results of all his pious activities will become burned by the fire of transcendental knowledge, and he will take his next birth in a family of Brahma-raksasas.” These offenses to the Lord’s holy name or devotional service as described in these statements of the Visnu-bhakti-candrodaya and Padma Purana should be understood to be great obstacles for they who aspire to make progress in spiritual life. 49 As when one see the Supreme Personality of Godhead present as the witness within the heart, one feels transcendental bliss, in the same way, when one properly chants the holy name of the Lord, one feels transcendental bliss. This is described by Sri Saunaka Rsi in the following words Srimad Bhagavatam (2.3.24): “Certainly that heart is steel-framed which, in spite of one’s chanting the holy name of the Lord with concentration, does not change when ecstasy takes place, tears fill the eyes and the hairs stand on end.”* 50 The holy name of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the mature fruit of all the Vedas and it is the transcendental form of the Supreme Lord. This is described in the following statement of the Prabhasa-khanda: “The holy name of Lord Krsna is the most auspicious of all auspicious things, and the sweetest of all sweet things. It is completely spiritual, without any touch of matter, and it is the transcendental fruit of the vine of all Vedic literatures. If one chants the holy name of Lord Krsna, even once, either with faith, or even in the spirit of mocking Him, the holy name will deliver the chanter from the bondage of material existence.” 51 From this we may understand that the holy name and form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are identical. This is clearly explained in Narada-pancaratra in the description of the eight-syllable mantra Om namo vasudevaya: “The supremely blissful personality of Godhead, Narayana is personally present in the sound vibration of the eight syllable mantra Om namo vasudevaya.” 52 The Supreme Lord’s name Om is described in the following statements of the Upanisads: “This entire cosmic manifestation is actually the syllable Om.” Chandogya Upanisad 2.24.4 “This entire universe is identical with the sacred syllable Om.” Mandukya Upanisad 1.1 53 The sacred syllable Om is further described in the Agama-sastra: “The sacred syllable om is identical with the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Om is the Supreme. Om has no front, no inside, and no outside. Nothing is superior to the changeless om. Om is the beginning, middle and end of everything. One who is able to understand the true nature of om eventually attains direct association of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. One should understand that the syllable om is identical with the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is situated in the hearts of all living beings. A thoughtful person who understands that the syllable om is actually the all-pervading Personality of Godhead, never laments for anything. Om is immeasurable and unlimited. Om is supremely auspicious for it eradicates the misconception of thinking that the material cosmos is independent of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. One who understands this true nature of the sacred syllable om is actually a learned philosopher. One who does not understand om is not a philosopher, but only an ignorant fool." 54 Someone may claim that the syllable om and the other names of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are not actually the Lord Himself, but are merely words, although occasionally in prayers we find some exaggerated statements glorifying them. This is not the truth. In truth the names of the Supreme Lord are considered His incarnations in the form of words, and they are not different from the Original Personality of Godhead Himself. This is confirmed by the Sruti-sastra. The name of the Personality of Godhead is therefore not different from the Personality of Godhead Himself. This is described in the Padma Purana: 55 "The holy name of Krsna is transcendentally blissful. It bestows all spiritual bendictions; for it is Krsna Himself, the reservoir of all pleasure. Krsna's name is complete, and it is the form of all transcendental mellows. It is not a material name under any condition, and it is no less powerful than Krsna Himself. Since Krsna's name is not contaminated by the material qualities, there is no question of its being involved with maya. Krsna's name is always liberated and spiritual; it is never conditioned by the laws of material nature. This is because the name of Krsna and Krsna Himself are identical." 56 In this verse the holy name of Krsna is described as 'cintamani' (a transcendental gem) because the holy name grants all benedictions. Not only that, but the holy name is the 'form of all transcendental mellows', and it is liberated and spiritual. The holy name of Krsna manifests these qualities because it is non different from Krsna Himself (abhinnatvat). 57 At this point someone may object: "If the holy name of Krsna is liberated and spiritual, as you say, then how is it possible for the liberated name of the Lord to appear before the material senses of the conditioned souls?" To this objection I reply: In truth, the holy name of Supreme Lord can be perceived by the senses of the conditioned souls. The Personality of Godhead has Himself explained this in Srimad Bhagavatam (11.21.36-37): 58 "The transcendental sound of the Vedas is very difficult to comprehend and manifests on different levels within the prana, senses and mind. This Vedic sound is unlimited, very deep and unfathomable, just like the ocean. "As the unlimited, unchanging and omnipotent Personality of Godhead dwelling within all living beings. I personally establish the Vedic sound vibration in the form of omkara within all living entities. It is thus perceived subtly, just like a single strand of fibre on a lotus stalk." 59 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead may appear before the residents of the material universe is also described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (12.6.47), where the division of the Vedas into its various parts is described in the following words: "Seeing that by the influence of time the living entities were becoming short-lived, weak, and unintelligent, the sages divided the Veda into its various parts, so it would be more easily understood. The sages did this because of the order of the infallible Supreme Personality of Godhead who was situated within their hearts."

Sridhara Svami comments: “Fearing that the intelligence of the human beings was becoming weak, the Personality of Godhead, situated within the hearts of the sages, ordered them to divide the Veda into its constituent parts.” In other words, the Supreme Lord appeared to the sages, from within their hearts. In this way He was directly perceived by them. 60 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead sometimes appears before the residents of the material world is also described in the following verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (12.13.50): “Let us meditate on the Supreme Truth, who is eternal, full of nectar, free from all lamentation, spotless and pure. Out of His own causeless mercy this Supreme truth, the Personality of Godhead formerly enlightened Brahma, Narada, Vyasa, Sukadeva Gosvami and Maharaja Pariksit, by presenting before them the light of transcendental knowledge.” 61 The Supreme Personality of godhead’s appearance before the residents of the material world is also described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.2.36), where the demigods pray to Lord Krsna, who is situated within the womb of Devaki: “O Lord, Your transcendental name and form are not ascertained by those who merely speculate on the path of imagination. Your name, form and attributes can be ascertained only through devotional service.”* 62 The special feature of the Supreme Personality of Godhead’s appearance in the material world is that He appears here by the agency of His own internal potency, and He is not forced to appear in the material world, but does so only by His own wish. These points have been clearly demonstrated in the previous portions of this book, and they are further corroborated by the following statement of Srimad-Bhagavatam (2.9.4): 63 “O King, the Personality of Godhead, being very much pleased with Lord brahma because of his non deceptive penance in bhakti yoga, presented His eternal and transcendental form before Brahma. And that is the objective goal for purifying the conditioned soul.”* 64 Sridhara Svami comments on this verse in the following words: “In the eight chapter of this Canto, Maharaja Pariksit asked: ‘If the Supreme Lord has a material body, then how is it that the devotees become liberated by simply serving and worshipping the material body of the Supreme Lord?’ Maharaja Pariksit also asked if there was any difference between the Lord’s body and the bodies of the conditioned souls. He said (2.8.8): “If the Supreme Personality of Godhead, from whose abdomen the lotus stem sprouted, is possessed of a gigantic body according to His own calibre and measurement, then what is the specific difference between the body of the Lord and those of common living entities?’ “This question is answered in this (2.9.4) verse. In this verse the phrase ‘atma-tattva-visuddhy-artham’ means: ‘The form of the Lord purifies the conditioned souls and bestows transcendental knowledge on them.’ One may ask: ‘What transcendental knowledge did the Lord teach Brahma?’ The answer is: ‘The Lord spoke to Brahma (bhagavan brahmane aha) the science of devotional service, which consists of austerities and other spiritual practices.’ One may ask: ‘What did the Lord then do?’ The answer is found in the phrase ‘rtam rupam darsayan’ (The Personality of Godhead presented His eternal and transcendental form before Brahma). One may ask: ‘Why did the Lord reveal His transcendental form?’ The answer is found in the phrase ‘avyalika-vratadrtah’ (the Personality of Godhead was very much pleased with Lord Brahma because of his non deceptive penance in bhakti-yoga). “From all this we may conclude that the external form of the conditioned living entity is a manifestation of the Supreme Lord’s material illusory potency. The form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, however, is different, for it is spiritual. It is not manifested by the material potency but by the Lord’s own spiritual potency known as yogamaya. In this way, because the form of the Personality of Godhead is spiritual in nature, by worshipping that spiritual form, the devotees attain liberation.” 65 Maharaja Vasudeva also describes the spiritual nature of the Supreme Personality of Godhead’s form in the following words Srimad Bhagavatam (10.3.20-21): “My Lord, Your form is transcendental to the three material modes, yet for the maintenance of the three worlds, You assume the white colour of Visnu in goodness, for creation, which is surrounded by the quality of passion, You appear reddish, and at the end, when there is a need for annihilation, which is surrounded by ignorance, You appear blackish.”* O my Lord, proprietor of all creation, You have now appeared in my house, desiring to protect this world. I am sure that You will kill all the armies that are moving all over the world under the leadership of politicians who are dressed as ksatriya rulers but who are factually demons. They must be killed by You for the protection of the innocent public.”* 66 This verse may be interpreted in the following way: “My Lord, You are the creator, maintainer and destroyer of the material worlds. When You desire to maintain the worlds, by manifesting Your own potency (sva-mayaya) You manifest the mode of goodness (atmanah suklam varnam). By doing this You protect the brahmanas and the other members of society also. When You desire to create you manifest the mode of passion (rajasopabrmhitam raktam). In this way You fulfil the passionate desires of the various classes of society, beginning with the brahmanas. When You desire to annihilate the universe You arrange for those things that are sinful and impure (krsnam).” This verse may also be interpreted: “O Lord, You appear in the pure (suklam) form of Visnu, which is free from all contact of the material modes of nature, and You also appear in a reddish (Brahma) and blackish (Siva) form for material creation and annihilation.” We many note here that as Lord Visnu remains untouched by the three modes of material nature, so Brahma and Siva also remain untouched by the three modes of material nature. 67 That Visnu, Brahma and Siva are above the three modes of material nature is the conclusion of Srila Sukadeva Gosvami, who said: “Siva appears to display the qualities of all three modes of nature, although He is actually free from their influence. He is full of all potencies, and His real transcendental nature remains hidden from the perception of ordinary men.” Srimad Bhagavatam (10.88.3) “Lord Hari is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. He is beyond the material nature and He remains always untouched by the three modes of nature." Srimad Bhagavatam (10.88.5) 68 The Supreme Lord remains always free from the modes of nature, even though He may sometimes appear to be under their influence. This is described in Srimad Bhagavatam (10.3.50): "Those Visnu forms, by Their pure smiling, which resembled the increasing light of the moon, and by the sidelong glances of Their reddish eyes, created and protected the desires of Their own devotees, as if by the modes of passion and goodness."* 69 This verse clearly explains that although the Lord may sometimes appear to be acting under the influence of the modes of passion and goodness, this is appearance only, and the Lord remains always free from the influence of the modes of nature. The previously quoted verse (Bhagavatam 10.3.20) explained that Visnu appears in the colour white, Brahma in red, and Siva in black. These colours are intended here as symbolic names for the three modes of nature. It should not be taken literally that these three deities manifest forms in these colours. For example, the guna-avatara of Lord Visnu who appears in the material world as Ksirodakasayi Visnu in order to protect the universe (as we will describe later in the Paramatma-sandarbha), is famous for manifesting a black form. In the same way Lord Siva, who destroys the universe, is famous for often appearing in a white form. These points are explained in the description of devotional service spoken by Gobhila Muni. In the same way, Lord Brahma does not manifest a red form. From this we may conclude that the colours of various personalities does not necessarily connect them to a specific mode of nature. Further examples are ducks and other animals, who although manifesting a white colour, are certainly not in the mode of goodness, and Srila Vyasadeva, Sukadeva Gosvami and others, who are worshipable for those in the mode of goodness, but who nevertheless manifest black forms according to the description of them found in the Puranas. This verse (Bhagavatam 10.3.20) continues: "O Lord, you show Your mercy to Your devotees by maintaining them and by appearing among them." Here the word 'raktam' means the modes of passion which inspires the desire to create, and a host of other desires as well. The word 'krsnam' in this verse means the mode of ignorance, which conceals the real spiritual identities of the individual souls. 70 The qualities of the three modes of nature are described in Srimad Bhagavatam (1.2.24): "Firewood is a transformation of earth, but smoke is better than the raw wood. And fire is still better, for by fire we can derive the benefits of superior knowledge (through Vedic sacrifices). Similarly, passion (rajas) is better than ignorance (tamas), but goodness (sattva) is best because by goodness one can come to realise the Absolute Truth."* 71 At this point someone may object: "By explaining that the black form of the Lord does not necessarily engage in the activities of universal destruction, the red form of the Lord does not necessarily engage in universal creation, and the white form of the Lord does not necessarily engage in maintaining the universe, you have certainly misled the people who read your book. Why do you speak in this way?"

Fearing that someone would speak this objection, and fearing that someone would think that Lord Krsna might have said “I have now assumed this black form of the mode of ignorance in order to destroy the universe”, Maharaja Vasudeva spoke the following verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.3.21) in order to affirm that Lord Krsna’s mission in the world is for its protection, and not its annihilation: “O my Lord, proprietor of all creation, You have now appeared in my house, desiring to protect this world. I am sure that you will kill all the armies that are moving all over the world under the leadership of politicians who are dressed as ksatriya rulers but who are factually demons. They must be killed by You for the protection of the innocent public.”* 72 This verse should be understood in the following way: Although the Personality of Godhead may assume forms that seem to correspond to certain modes of material nature, these forms are all spiritual and situated in pure goodness, beyond the modes of nature. At the time of cosmic annihilation, because the Lord gives only suffering to the living entities, He remains in a position of deep sleep. This description of the Lord does not apply to this case of Lord Krsna. Lord Krsna does not remain permanently asleep, and neither is He a source of constant suffering for the living entities, but rather He gives transcendental bliss to the entire world. It is true, of course, that He does kill the demons, however, is only the pretext that the Lord uses to grant them His mercy and grant them liberation, elevating them beyond the modes of material nature. From this we may conclude that the black form of Krsna does not exclusively engage in destruction, and therefore it is not appropriate to consider Lord Krsna the incarnation that engages in the activities of the mode of ignorance. It is true that one meaning of the word ‘Krsna” is ‘darkness’, but that meaning is not appropriate in this context. A word should be understood according to the context in which it is used, just as if I say ‘Please bring the saindhava’, because the word ‘saindhava’ means ‘both ‘salt’ and ‘horse’, the proper meaning of the word ‘saindhava’ must be determined according to the context. In this same way the word ‘krsna’ in this verse should be understood according to the context. Here the word ‘krsna’ clearly does not mean ‘darkness’. 73 Because Lord Sri Krsna does not perform the activities of the mode of darkness, He should not be understood as the incarnation representing darkness. The actions of the different modes of nature are described in Srimad Bhagavatam (7.1.8): “When the quality of goodness is prominent, the sages and demigods flourish with the help of that quality, with which they are infused and surcharged by the Supreme Lord. Similarly, when the mode of passion is prominent the demons flourish, and when ignorance is prominent the Yaksas and Raksasas flourish. The Supreme Personality of Godhead is present in everyone’s heart, fostering the reactions of sattva-guna, rajo-guna and tamo-guna.”* 74 The black form of Lord Krsna is therefore not a manifestation of the mode of darkness. In the same way the red and white forms of the Lord are not manifestations of the modes of passion and ignorance, as some would have it. The evidence offered by the Vedic literatures is, therefore, that all the forms of the Lord are transcendental and beyond the modes, and the colour a specific form of the Lord does not indicate the influence of a particular mode of material nature. 75 The transcendental nature of the form of the Personality of Godhead was also described by Devaki-devi, who respectfully said (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.3.24): “My dear Lord, there are different Vedas, some of which describe You as unperceivable through words and the mind. Yet You are the origin of the entire cosmic manifestation. You are Brahman, the greatest of everything, full of effulgence like the sun. You have no material cause, You are free from change and deviation, and You have no material desires. Thus the Vedas say that You are the substance. Therefore, my Lord, You are directly the origin of all Vedic statements, and by understanding You, one gradually understands everything. You are different from the light of Brahman and Paramatma, yet You are not different from them. Everything emanates from You. Indeed, You are the cause of all causes, Lord Visnu, the light of all transcendental knowledge.”* 76 The form of the Personality of Godhead is not material, nor is it a product of the material modes of nature, nor does it have any material attributes. Because the wonderful form of the Supreme Lord attracts the self-realised liberated souls, it should be understood that the Lord’s form is completely spiritual. The liberated soul’s attraction to the Lord’s form is described by Srila Suta Gosvami (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.7.10-11): “All different varieties of atmaramas (those who take pleasure in atma, or spirit self), especially those established on the path of self-realisation, though freed from all kinds of material bondage, desire to render unalloyed devotional service unto the Personality of Godhead. This means that the Lord possesses transcendental qualities and therefore can attract everyone, including liberated souls.* “Srila Sukadeva Gosvami, son of Srila Vyasadeva, was not only transcendentally powerful. He was also very dear to the devotees of the Lord. Thus he underwent the study of this great narration (Srimad Bhagavatam).”* 77-78 The spiritual nature of the Personality of Godhead is also described in the following statement of the Visnu-dharma Purana, Uttara-khanda: “Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead is full of all opulences, it should be understood that within Him are all transcendental qualities, and He is completely free of any faults or defects although, under the influence of the illusory energy (maya), some foolish persons falsely claim that the Supreme Lord has both good qualities and faults. It should be understood that neither the illusory material energy, nor it’s illusory by-products exist within the Supreme Lord. How, indeed, could they enter within Him? It should, therefore, be understood that all the qualities of the Supreme Lord are the manifestations of His transcendental opulence. They are not produced by the illusory material energy (maya). Because the Lord is completely free from the influence of the material energy, He is known as Paramatma, or the Supreme.” 79 We shall now present the final part of the explanation of the Srimad Bhagavatam verse (8.3.8) first discussed at the beginning of this anuccheda. Now that it has been clearly established that the forms and qualities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are spiritual and completely different from the material energy, someone may object: 'If the pastimes and forms of the Supreme Lord are spiritual, perfect and complete, then why does the Lord descend to this material world at all?" Fearing that someone might say this, the Srimad-Bhagavatam explains: 'lokapyaya-sambhavaya' (The Supreme Lord descends to the material world in order to rescue the devotees from the cycle of repeated birth and death) and 'bhu-praptau' (The Lord appears in order to give transcendental happiness to His eternal associates)." 80 These transcendental purposes of the Lord's advent are also described in the following verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.7.25) where Arjuna says: "Thus You have descended as an incarnation to remove the burden of the world and to benefit Your friends, especially those who are Your exclusive devotees and are rapt in meditation upon You."* 81 This verse means: "O Lord, just as You have formerly appeared as the purusa-avataras and other incarnations, You have now appeared (tathayam avatarah) in Your original form as Sri Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. You have appeared in order to remove the burden of the earth planet (bhuvo bhara-jihirsaya) who is Your great devotee, and enable Your devotees to constantly relish the happiness of worshipping You and meditating on You (anudhyanaya)." 82 At this point someone may say: "Krsna must take birth in this material world in order to give happiness to His devotees. He cannot avoid coming here." To this statement I reply: This is not a fact. Krsna is not forced to do anything. He is free and independent. His independence is described in the Narayana-samhita: "The independent Personality of Godhead is full of all transcendental bliss. How is it possible to say that He needs anything or is forced to do anything? It is not possible." As far as His appearing in this world to give happiness to the pure devotees (ananya-bhavanam) is concerned, that does not detract from His independence. He comes because He is merciful to His devotees. He is free from all faults, and because lack of mercy is a fault, He is free from all mercilessness also. Free from that fault, He is very merciful to His pure devotees and He voluntarily appears before them to give them transcendental happiness. One may say that His supreme independence and His mercy contradict each other and His mercy detracts somewhat from His independence. Actually He is both independent and merciful. Both qualities exist in the Lord even though they may sometimes contradict each other. The Kurma Purana explains the mutually contradictory qualities of the Lord in the following words: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead possesses mutually contradictory qualities." That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the reservoir of all wonderful qualities is also emphatically declared by the Sruti-sastra and other Vedic literatures and because He is full of these wonderful qualities He attracts all living entities from the demigod Brahma down to the most insignificant creature. 83 Lord Krsna personally confirmed His own supreme independence in these words to the gopis (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.32.19-20): "My dear friends, persons who simply reciprocate the loving dealings of the other part are just like merchants. They give in loving affairs as much as they get from the other party. Practically there is no question of love. It is simply business dealing, and it is self-interested or self-centred. Better the second class of men, who love in spite of the opposite party's contrariness; even those without a tinge of loving affairs are better than the mechants. Sincere love can be seen when the father and mother love their children in spite of their children's neglect. The third class neither reciprocates nor neglects. They can be further divided into two classes. One is the self-satisfied, who do not require anyone's love. They are called atmarama, which means they are absorbed in the thought of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and so do not care whether one loves them or not. But another class are ungrateful men. They are called callous. The men in this group revolt against superior persons. For instance, a son, in spite of receiving all kinds of things from loving parents, may be callous and not reciprocate. Those in this class are generally known as gurudruha, which means they receive favours from the parents or the spiritual master and yet neglect them.* "My dear friends, you might be aggrieved by My words and acts, but you must know that sometimes I do not reciprocate my devotees' dealings with Me. It appears that my devotees are very much attached to Me, but sometimes I do not reciprocate their feelings properly in order to increase their love for Me more and more. If I can very easily be approached by them, they might think, 'Krsna is so easily available'. So sometimes I do not respond. If a person has no money but after some time accumulates some wealth and then loses it, he will think of the lost property twenty-four hours a day. Similarly, in order to increase the love of My devotees, sometimes I appear to be lost to them, and instead of forgetting Me, they feel their loving sentiments for Me increase."* 84 Therefore we may conclude that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is omnipotent, and although He is never forced to do anything, He voluntary performs wonderful, blissful transcendental pastimes and in this way delights His devotees. This is also described in Srimad Bhagavatam 8.3.8 the verse quoted at the beginning of this anuccheda. 85 Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead is all-powerful, His mercy brings happiness in its wake. This is described in the following saying: "The mercy of an incompetent fool brings suffering to those who receive it, whereas the mercy of a powerful and intelligent person brings happiness."

Anuccheda 48

1 The statement of the Sruti-sastra that the Supreme has neither hands nor feet means that the eternal, spiritual, limitless, blissful form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, has spiritual and not material limbs. This statement of the Vedas does not mean anything else. That this is so is confirmed by the following statement of the Personified Vedas (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.28): “O Lord, You are independent. Although You have no material senses, Your potency maintains the senses of everyone. The demigods and the goddess Maya worship You with offerings. As small kings carry others’ offerings to the great emperor, so the awe-struck demigods carry the living entities’ offerings to You, the creator of the worlds.' 2 This verse should be understood in the following way: The material external senses of the conditioned souls are different from the conditioned souls themselves just as the doer is different from the activities he performs, or, in one sense, a fire is different from its activity of burning. The external senses of the conditioned soul are material in nature and different from the spiritual form of the soul itself. In this way it is said that the conditioned soul 'has senses', which is equivalent to saying 'has external material senses different from himself". The Supreme Personality of Godhead never has external material senses attached to His original spiritual form. His spiritual senses are an integral part of his spiritual form, and are, therefore, not different from His self. In this verse the word 'svarat' is used to mean 'self-manifest." This word is used to describe the Supreme Lord's senses which are a 'self-manifest' part of His spiritual form, and not an external imposition as they are for the conditioned souls. In this way it should be understood that the Personality of Godhead does not 'have' senses in the same way the conditioned soul does. The conditioned soul is encased in a material body and attached to a set of material senses. The Lord, however, although present within the conditioned soul's heart as the Supersoul, is free from the encumbrance of a set of external material senses. In this way the Lord does not 'have' senses. 3 The Supreme Lord's lotus feet, which imply the existence of His spiritual limbs and senses, are described in the following prayer, where the Personified Vedas say at the time of universal annihilation (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.23): "Women such as the gopis were attached to Krsna and wanted to be embraced by the arms of Krsna, which resemble the beautiful round shape of a snake. Similarly there are the Vedic hymns, and we also concentrate upon Your lotus feet to go back home, back to Godhead."* 4 This verse should be understood in the following way: "O Supreme Lord, We, who are the spiritual masters of the greatest learned scholars, are engaged in glorifying Your wonderful transcendental senses. Why, then, is it sometimes said in the Vedic literatures that You are without senses? You are said to be without senses because You have no material senses. All Your senses are an integral part (svarat) of Your spiritual form, and they are not material." 5 At this point someone may object: "The Personality of Godhead is manifested in the many forms of His various incarnations. How is it possible that these different forms have senses that are an integral part of the Supreme Lord's original spiritual form. Clearly, the bodies of the Lord's various incarnations as well as the sets of senses attached to those bodies must be impositions on the original identity of the Lord. Such senses cannot be self-manifested non imposed senses as you have described." To this objection I reply: The spiritual form of the Personality of Godhead is actually one, although He may appear in many different features in many places. In this way His senses are not different from His self regardless of the feature He is inclined to manifest at any particular moment. That the spiritual form of the Supreme Lord is none, although manifested variously, is confirmed by the following statements of Vedic literature: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is blissful and eternal. Although He is the oldest is completely free from the infirmities of old-age. Although He manifests Himself in many different forms, all these actually form a single transcendental form." Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad 4.4.19 "Although the Supreme Personality of Godhead may appear to be different forms, the forms are actually one single transcendental form. These forms are not at all different from each other." Katha Upanisad 2.1.11 "The hands, feet, face, abdomen, and other parts of the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are completely spiritual in nature. These limbs of the Lord are all full of transcendental bliss." Smrti-sastra 6 At this point Lord Krsna, taking the part of the devil's advocate, might raise the following objection: "My friend, what evidence do you have that the potency of such transcendental senses is present within Me?": To this objection I reply: O Lord, the Personified Vedas address You saying (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.28): 'akhila-karaka-sakti-dharah' (O Lord, it is You who enable the eyes and other senses of the living entities to act)'. Therefore, because the powers of the conditioned souls' senses comes from You, we must conclude that all powers of all senses are originally present within You in perfection and completeness. 7 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the original source of all the powers of the senses is also confirmed by the following statements of the Upanisads: "The power of the living force present in the individual living entities is manifested from the living force of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and the powers of the eyes and other senses are similarly manifested from the eyes and senses of the Supreme Personality." Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad 4.4.18 "The Supreme Personality of Godhead naturally has all powers to acquire knowledge (jnana-sakti) and do whatever He wishes (sandhini-sakti and kriya-sakti)." Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.8 8 This is also explained in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (11.4.4): "From the senses of the Supreme Personality of Godhead the working and knowledge acquiring senses of the embodied conditioned souls gain their power. From the Lord's breath the conditioned souls attain knowledge, bodily power, sensory power, and the power to act." 9 The Vedic literatures say the Supreme Lord has senses, and at other times the Vedas say the Supreme Lord has no senses. Some examples follow: "Because the Supreme Godhead has no senses, therefore He cannot be described." Vedanta-sutra 2.1.31 "Because the Supreme Godhead is the origin of the sense of hearing and all other senses, it should be understood that He has His own sense of hearing and His own set of all other senses as well." Vedanta-sutra 2.1.27 "The Supreme Lord has no senses and no duty He is obliged to perform." Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.8 "From You, O Supreme Lord, the powers of the conditioned souls' senses are manifested. For this reason the powers of the senses are originally present in You." Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.28 These statements may appear contradictory and illogical, but the fact is they all explain the same truth: that the Supreme Lord does not have material senses, for His senses are spiritual. 10 The explanation of Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.28 continues: This verse explains that Indra and the other demigods (animisah), whose glory is inferior to that of the Supreme Lord, along with the Brahmas and other universal creators (visva-srjah), who are worshipable for the Indras and other demigods, make offerings (balim vahanti) to You (tava) O Lord, with respectfully raised heads (ut). These demigods are accompanied by the illusory potency Maya-devi, who is their supervisor and controller. In order to obtain auspiciousness for herself, whose power is simply a pale reflection of that of the Lord, who is full of all transcendental power and bliss, Maya-devi also brings offerings to the Supreme Lord. Human beings also make offerings to the Lord (Samadanti) in the forms of various Vedic sacrifices, and after the offerings are complete, they eat the sacred remnants. 11 Here the example is given of the earthly kings. As small kings being tribute to the emperor, so the demigods and other living entities make offerings to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Why do they make these offerings? Because the Supreme Lord has commanded them. 12 That the various demigods are obedient to the commands of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is confirmed by the following statement of Taittiriya Upanisad (2.8.1): “Out of fear of the Supreme Personality of Godhead the wind blows. Out of fear of the Supreme Personality of Godhead the sun rises. Out of fear of the Supreme Personality of Godhead fire burns, the moon shines, and death moves about, taking its toll.” 13 At this point the Supreme Personality of Godhead might object: “Please speak whatever evidence you have, if indeed you have some evidence, to prove that My hands and other limbs and senses are an integral part of My transcendental personality and not an external imposition as is the case with the conditioned souls.” To the Lord’s objection I reply: In Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.28 the Personified Vedas declare that the various demigods (animisah) who are predominating deities of the various senses and creators of the various universal ingredients (visva-srjah), as Brahma and the prajapatis are, all bring presentations (balim udvahanti) as offerings to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. From this we may understand that the presiding deities of the various senses consider themselves subordinate to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and because they take shelter of Him they are able to discharge their duties as controllers of the senses. Because the Personality of Godhead, therefore, is the supreme among all presiding deities of the senses, and there is no one superior to Him in this respect, it may be concluded that His senses are not a gift from someone else, but they are an integral part of His original transcendental form. Someone may object to this, saying that the illusory potency Maya-devi is the supreme among the presiding deities of the senses and not the Personality of Godhead. This objection is refuted by the use of the word ‘mayaya’ in this verse. The word ‘mayaya’ here indicates that Maya-devi also brings presentations to the Personality of Godhead and considers herself His servant. 14 At this point the Supreme Personality of Godhead may raise the following objection: “All right, if the demigods are not the ultimate predominating deities of the senses, then certainly the individual living entities themselves are:" To this objection I reply: This verse from Srimad Bhagavatam (10.87.28) explains that the individual living entities also present offerings to the Supreme Personality of Godhead and thus accept a position subordinate to Him. O Lord, it is You who grant the demigods jurisdiction over the sense-organs by which the living entities are able to perceive the various interactions of material nature. By comparison the individual living entities have only a small jurisdiction over the sense-instruments. They are certainly not the ultimate presiding deities over all the senses. That Supreme predominating deity over the actions of the senses is none other than Yourself.

1 The limbs and senses of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are spiritual and therefore different from the material senses which cover the conditioned living entities, for this reason the Vedas declare 'apani-padam' (the Supreme has no hands or feet). That the form and senses of the Personality of Godhead are not material is also confirmed in the following words spoken by Srimati Rukmini-devi to Lord Krsna (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.60.45): “A man within this material world is just a dead body. In fact, superficially, the living entity is covered by this body, which is nothing but a bag of skin decorated with beards and moustaches, hairs on the body, nails on the fingers, and hairs on the head. Within this decorated bag there are bunches of muscles, bundles of bones, amid pools of blood, always mixed up with stool, urine, mucus, bile and polluted air, and enjoyed by different kinds of insects and germs. A foolish woman accepts such a dead body as her husband, and in sheer misunderstanding loves him as her dear companion. This is only possible because such a woman has never tasted the ever-blissful flavour of Your lotus feet.”* 2 This statement of Srimati Rukmini-devi describes the spiritual, blissful nature of the Supreme Personality of Godhead’s hair and other limbs and senses, which are different from the material limbs and senses of the embodied souls. When the demigod Brahma blessed Hiranyakasipu that he would not be killed by different varieties of living entities (Srimad Bhagavatam 7.3.37), Brahma said that no one alive or dead would kill Hiranyakasipu. This means both that Hiranyakasipu could be killed by the claws of Lord Nrsimhadeva (claws being neither alive nor dead), and also that Hiranyakasipu could be killed by the spiritual form of Lord Nrsimhadeva, which is neither alive in the same way material bodies are alive, nor dead. That the spiritual form of the Lord is not materially alive or dead is confirmed in the following statements of the Upanisads, which negate firstly material life, and secondly inert lifelessness: “The Supreme Personality of Godhead does not have a material mind as the conditioned souls do. He does not have a body that is alive in the material sense, and at the same time, in the spiritual sense He is eternally alive and can never be killed. In other words His form is completely spiritual and not at all material.” Mundaka Upanisad 2.1.2 “The Vedic literatures are manifested from the breathing of the living Supreme Personality of Godhead.” Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad 4.5.11 3 The spiritual nature of the Supreme Lord’s form is also described in the following statement of Varaha Purana: “The form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is not a material production of fat, marrow, bones and similar substances and neither is His form a magical production of mystic illusion produced by yogic power. Because the Lord is the Supreme Controller of everything His form is eternal, spiritual, infallible, unvanquishable and all-powerful.” 4 This verse confirms that the Lord’s form is neither material nor a production of yoga magic. Because the Personality of Godhead is the supreme master of everything that exists, His form is eternal. This verse also confirmed that the Lord’s eternal spiritual form is omniscient and omnipotent, able to perform anything the Lord desires. The Lord’s form is different from the forms of the conditioned souls in the sense that the conditioned souls have an external material body made of inert and lifeless material elements. The material body of the conditioned soul is like a corpse covering the living spirit souls (jiva cchavam). The Supreme Personality of Godhead, however, does not have such a covering of inert matter. His form is spiritual and alive. It is not different from Himself. This is the difference between the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the external material bodies of the conditioned souls. The Supreme Personality of Godhead's form is unchanging and lives forever. It is spiritual, eternal, full of bliss, and supremely worshipable. This is the difference between the spiritual form of the Personality of Godhead and the external material bodies of the conditioned souls.

1 The Vedas sometimes say the Supreme Personality of Godhead has neither name nor form, and other times say He does have a name and form. In this dispute the following conclusion is given (Srimad Bhagavatam 6.4.31): “The two parties - namely the theists and the atheists. The theist, who accepts the Supersoul, finds the spiritual cause through mystic yoga. The Sankhyite, however, who merely analyses the material elements, comes to a conclusion of impersonalism and does not accept a supreme cause - whether Bhagavan, Paramatma or even Brahma. Instead, he is preoccupied with the superfluous , external activities of material nature. Ultimately, however, both parties demonstrate the Absolute Truth because although they offer opposing statements, their object is the same ultimate cause. They are both approaching the same Supreme Brahman, to whom I offer my respectful obeisances.”* 2 This verse says there are two parties of philosophers. Some Vedic literatures recommend worship of the gigantic Universal Form of the Personality of Godhead. In this view the entire universe is the form of the Lord. The lower planetary system is His lotus feet, and various other parts of the universe correspond to various parts of the gigantic body of the Lord. In this conception the names of various objects, such as a pitcher, a piece of cloth, etc. may be considered names of the Supreme Lord because the entire universe is nothing but the Lord’s gigantic body. This view, which accepts that the Lord has a form and name, is referred to in this verse as the party that says ‘asti’ (there is a form and name of the Lord). The second party follows the speculative scriptures of sankhya philosophy, which asserts that the Lord has neither name nor form. According to these sankhyites, the Universal Form is an imagination, for the Supreme Personality of Godhead does not have a material form or name. This second party is identified by the phrase ‘nasti’ (there is no form or name of the Lord.) 3 Although these views seem to contradict each other, both are supported by the preceding statements of Srimad Bhagavatam. Examples of quotations supporting each view follow: “The Personality of Godhead manifests the entire universe as His form. He may be addressed by various spiritual names, which are inconceivable to the material senses. When will that Supreme Personality of Godhead be pleased with me?”* Srimad Bhagavatam 6.4.28 “Anything expressed by material vibrations, anything ascertained by material intelligence and anything experienced by the material senses or concocted within the material mind is but an effect of the modes of nature and therefore has nothing to do with the real nature of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The Supreme Lord is beyond the creation of this material world, for He is the source of the material qualities and creation. As the cause of all causes, He exists before the creation. I wish to offer my respectful obeisances unto Him."* Srimad Bhagavatam 6.4.29 4 Someone may object: "In this verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 6.4.31) the different views of the theists and atheistic sankhyites are described. Do these two parties not perceive two different objects? I think that is the proper way to understand their disagreement." To this objection I reply: This verse clearly explains that these two parties perceive the same object (eka-sthayoh). The Supreme has no material form, and therefore one party proclaims that the Supreme has no form or name. At the same time the Supreme does have a spiritual form and name, and therefore another party proclaims that the Supreme has a form and name. In this way there is no real difference of opinion among the transcendentalists in this matter, and there is no real contradiction in what at first may appear contradictory statements of the Vedas. 5 This seeming difference of opinion about the nature of the Supreme is also resolved by the following statement of Maharaja Dhruva, who describes the non-material nature of the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.9.13): "My dear Lord, O Supreme Unborn, I know that the different varieties of living entities, such as animals, trees, birds, reptiles, demigods and human beings, are spread throughout the universe, which is caused by the total material energy, and I know that they are sometimes manifest and sometimes unmanifest; but I have never experienced the supreme form I behold as I see You now. Now all kinds of methods of theorising have come to an end."* 6 The word 'rupam' (form) and its relation to the two views of the nature of the Lord (as with and without name and form), is described in Visnu Purana: "O King, the Supreme Godhead has a form , and at the same time He has no form. He is simultaneously immanent and transcendent." In the previously quoted statement of Dhruva Maharaja the words 'atah param' refer to the four-armed forms of Lord Narayana and other forms of the Supreme Lord. The words 'na vedmi' mean 'I have never experienced the supreme form I behold as I see You now." 7 That the Personality of Godhead has no material names and forms because all His names and forms are spiritual is also described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (6.4.33): "The Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is inconceivably opulent, who is devoid of all material names, forms and pastimes, and who is all-pervading, is especially merciful to the devotees who worship His lotus feet. Thus He exhibits transcendental forms and names with His different pastimes. May that Supreme Personality of Godhead, whose form is eternal and full of knowledge and bliss, be merciful to me."* 8 This verse explains that the Supreme Personality of Godhead, although He is devoid of all material names, forms, and pastimes, nevertheless exhibits transcendental forms and names (namani rupani ca bheje) with His transcendental birth (janma) and different pastimes (karmabhih). The faulty reasoning of they who insist that the Supreme has no names or forms at all is refuted in this verse by the use of the word ‘ananta’ (unlimited), for if the Supreme Godhead has no form, names, qualities, or pastimes then His power to act is certainly sharply curtailed. Because His power is unlimited (ananta), He is the full possessor of innumerable transcendental forms, names, qualities and pastimes. 9 The unlimited forms, names and opulences of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are described by the Pracetas in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.30.31): “Dear Lord, we shall therefore pray for Your benediction because You are the Supreme beyond all transcendence and because there is no end to Your opulences. Consequently You are celebrated by the name Ananta.”* 10 Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the origin of innumerable transcendental forms, names, qualities and pastimes, He is known as ‘Bhagavan’, the possessor (van) of the opulences (bhaga) that are His potencies. His potencies are not an illusion (maya). They are described by the word ‘parama’, which means ‘the supreme (para) opulence (ma)’. Any other interpretation of these words would contradict the truth that the Lord is transcendental and supreme. 11 That the form and attributes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are not a product of the illusory material energy maya is confirmed by the Vedic literatures: “The Supreme Personality of Godhead is full of all powers and opulences. Because He is beyond the influence of the material energy maya, the saintly devotees know that He is the Supreme.” 12 At this point someone may object: “The devotees argue that the Supreme has spiritual but not material forms and names. Why should we take these devotees as authorities? Why should the opinion of the devotees be taken with such seriousness?” Considering that someone might raise such an objection, the Srimad Bhagavatam glorifies the devotees in the following words (6.4.33, quoted previously): “Supreme Personality of Godhead is especially merciful to the devotees who worship His lotus feet.”* The conclusion should be that the Supreme Personality of Godhead does not reveal Himself as fully to the yogis and sankhya philosophers as He does to the devotees. This is also confirmed by the following statement of the Mathara-sruti (as quoted in Sripada Madhvacarya’s commentary on Vedanta-sutra 3.3.54): “Devotional service enables one to see the Supreme Personality of Godhead.” In this way we may understand that the debate over whether the Supreme has a form, name and senses does not have any real meaning. That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is very affectionate to His devotees is also confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (6.4.35-36): 13 “The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Hari, who is extremely affectionate to His devotees, was very pleased by the prayers offered by Daksa, and thus He appeared at that holy place known as Aghamarsana. O Maharaja Pariksit, best of the Kuru dynasty, the Lord’s lotus feet rested on the shoulders of His carrier Garuda, and He appeared with eight long mighty, very beautiful arms.”* 14 By saying “The Supreme Personality of Godhead exhibits (bheje) transcendental names and forms with His different pastimes”, this verse (6.4.33) confirms the fact that the Supreme Godhead has innumerable forms, names, and qualities. That the Lord's form is eternal is confirmed by the following statement of Maha-Narayana Upanisad (5.10): "The supremely pure lotus feet of the Lord are eternal and have existed since time immemorial." Because the Supreme Lord is identified as 'ananta' (unlimited) in this verse (6.4.33), it should be understood that His names and forms are also unlimited. That the Lord has spiritual but not material senses is also confirmed by Sridhara Svami who comments: "The statement in this verse that the Supreme Godhead has neither names nor forms should be taken to mean that He does not have material names or forms."

1 The form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead should be considered fully transcendental and spiritual because it is eternal, all-powerful, all-pervading, the shelter of everything, transcendental to all gross and subtle forms of material energy, manifested in the hearts of all conditioned souls, manifest only by the Lord's own wish, and clearly described in all Vedic literatures. The supreme philosopher, Brahma, has described the Lord's form in the following three verses of Srimad Bhagavatam (3.9.2-4): 2 "The form which I see is eternally freed from material contamination and has advented to show mercy to the devotees as a manifestation of internal potency. This incarnation is the origin of many other incarnations, and I am born from the lotus flower grown from Your navel home.* 3 "O Lord, I do not see a form superior to Your present form of eternal bliss and knowledge. In Your impersonal Brahman effulgence in the spiritual sky, there is no occasional change and no deterioration of internal potency. I surrender unto You because whereas I am proud of my material body and senses, Your Lordship is the cause of the cosmic manifestation and yet You are untouched by matter.* 4 "The present form, or any transcendental form expanded by the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Krsna, is equally auspicious for all the universes. Since You have manifested this eternal personal form upon whom Your devotees meditate, I therefore offer my respectful obeisances unto You. Those who are destined to be dispatched to the path of hell neglect Your personal form because of speculating on material topics."* 5 Sridhara Svami comments on these verses in the following words: "Someone may object: Is it not true that you have not actually seen the transcendental Supreme Godhead? You may have seen some form, but that form is simply a production of the three modes of material nature. It is not at all transcendental, for the transcendental Supreme Godhead is devoid of all form and qualities. "Thinking someone might argue in this way, Lord Brahma spoke the first two of these verses. 6 "In the first of these verses Brahma says: 'The form which I see is eternally freed from material contamination (avabodha-rasodayena sasvan-nivrtta-tamah) and has voluntarily advented to show mercy to the devotees (sad-anugrahaya grhitam). This incarnation is the origin of many other incarnations (avatara-sataika-bijam), who are all situated in the platform of transcendental goodness. I, who am the rajo-guna-avatara, are born from the lotus flower grown from Your navel home (yan-nabhi-padma-bhavanat).' "In the second of these verses Brahma says: 'O my Lord (parama), I do not see (na pasyami) a form superior (param) to Your present form (bhavatah svarupam) of eternal bliss and knowledge. In your impersonal Brahman effulgence in the spiritual sky (ananda-matram), there is no occasional change (avikalpam) and no deterioration of internal potency (aviddha-varcah). I surrender unto You (asrito smi) because, whereas I am proud of my material body and senses (bhutendriyatmaka-madah), Your Lordship is the cause of the cosmic manifestation (visva-srjam), and yet You are untouched by matter (avisvam). You are the original creator of the material bodies and senses of the conditioned souls, and You are the ultimate object of worship.' 7 "Thinking someone might consider the Supreme Lord's form to be only recently, and not eternally, manifested, Brahma spoke the third verse, saying 'This present form, or any transcendental form expanded by the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Krsna, is equally auspicious for all the universes (bhuvana-mangala). Since You have manifested this eternal personal form upon whom we, Your devotees meditate (upasakanam mangalaya dhyane darsitam), I therefore offer my respectful obeisances unto You (tubhyam name nuvidhema). You do not reveal this transcendental form to those of us whose minds are attached to the path of impersonalist speculation.' "At this point Sri Krsna might object: 'If this is true, then why is it that some people decline to worship Me?" "To answer this question Brahma says: 'Those who are destined to be dispatched to the path of hell neglect Your personal form (yo nadrtah) because of speculating on material topics (asat-prasangaih) and accepting the faulty logic of atheistic philosophers.'" 8 Because Brahma is the spiritual master of the greatest philosophers, he never accepts any view in opposition to that expressed in these verses. The impersonalists and atheists, however, do not accept these statements of Lord Brahma. The impersonalists had previously been described by Brahma in the words 'avyakta-vartmabhinivesitatma' (those absorbed in meditation on the impersonal feature of the Supreme). The atheists were described by Srila Sridhara Svami at the end of the previous quotation. Although the transcendental form of the Personality of Godhead is clearly established by all authorities, the atheists reject the direct experience of the learned devotees, and insist there is no God. 9 On the other hand, the devotees, who are qualified to properly understand the Supreme Lord's transcendental form are described in the following verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.9.5), where Brahma says: "O my Lord, persons who smell the aroma of Your lotus feet carried by the air of Vedic sound through the holes of the ears, accept Your devotional service. For them You are never separated from the lotus of their hearts."* 10 In this verse the word 'tut' (but) is used to contrast the devotees of the Lord with the previously described non devotees. Brahma describes the devotees saying:

“O Lord, the devotees have faith in the existence of Your transcendental form because they accept the Vedic revelation as the highest source of knowledge. They smell the aroma of Your lotus feet, carried by the air of Vedic sound (sruti-vata-nitam), through the holes of the ears, and they accept the devotional service of Your lotus feet (bhaktya grhita-caranah).”

1 Even in the form of the empowered avesa-avatara, Lord Rsabhadeva is transcendental in nature. This is confirmed by the following verse of Srimad Bhagavatam (5.5.19) where Lord Rsabhadeva says: “My transcendental body (sac-cid-ananda-vigraha) looks exactly like a human form, but it is not a material human body. It is inconceivable. I am not forced by nature to accept a particular type of body; I take on a body by My own sweet will. My heart is also spiritual, and I always think of the welfare of My devotees. Therefore within My heart can be found the process of devotional service, which is meant for the devotees. Far from My heart have I abandoned irreligion (adharma) and non devotional activities). They do not appeal to Me. Due to all these transcendental qualities, people generally pray to Me as Rsabhadeva, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the best of all living entities.”* 2 In this verse Lord Rsabhadeva says: ‘My transcendental body (sac-cid-ananda-vigrahah) looks exactly like a human form, but it is not a material human body (sariram). It is inconceivable (durvibhavyam). Within My heart (me hrdayam) can be found the process of devotional service (dharmah), which is meant for the devotees. Far from My heart have I abandoned irreligion (adharma) and non devotional activities.” In order to demonstrate the proper mode of action for a self-satisfied transcendentalist, Lord Rsabhadeva, the speaker of this verse, pretended to leave His body at the final stage of His earthly pastimes. The ordinary conditioned souls mistakenly thought that He died or left His body. 3 Lord Rsabhadeva’s final pastimes, and His so-called ‘death’ are described in Srimad Bhagavatam (5.6.6): “Lord Rsabhadeva was the head of all kings and emperors within this universe, but assuming the dress and language of an avadhuta, He acted as if dull and materially bound. Consequently no one could observe His divine opulence. He adopted this behaviour just to teach yogis how to give up the body. Nonetheless He maintained His original position as a plenary expansion of Lord Vasudeva, Krsna. Remaining always in that state, He gave up His pastimes as Lord Rsabhadeva within the material world. If, following in the footsteps of Lord Rsabhadeva, one can give up his subtle body, there is no chance that one will accept a material body again.”* 4 Lord Rsabhadeva’s celebrated abandonment of His body is described in the devotional scripture of Srimad Bhagavatam (5.6.8): “While He was wandering about, a wild forest fire began. This fire was caused by the friction of bamboos, which were bring blown by the wind. In that fire, the entire forest near Kutakacala and the body of Lord Rsabhadeva were burnt to ashes.”* 5 We may note in this verse that the words ‘tena saha’ (with that body) are in the instrumental case, and the subject of the sentence, ‘davalanah’ (a forest-fire), is in the nominative case. The trees and other residents of the forest who gave up their material bodies in that forest-fire as Lord Rsabhadeva pretended to give up His spiritual form, all attained liberation. 6 The associates of Lord Ramacandra also attained liberation in the same way. This is described in Srimad Bhagavatam (9.11.22): “Lord Ramacandra returned to His abode, to which the bhakti-yogis are promoted. This is the place to which all the inhabitants of Ayodhya went after they served the Lord in His manifest pastimes by offering Him obeisances, touching His lotus feet, fully observing Him as a fatherlike King, sitting or lying down with Him like equals, or even just accompanying Him."* 7 In this way, Lord Rsabhadeva's disappearance in the forest fire is described. We may also note that at the end of this chapter in Srimad Bhagavatam the chapter title is given: "The Appearance of Lord Rsabhadeva". The title clearly does not say 'the Birth of Lord Rsabhadeva", because the Lord was not born in the same way conditioned souls are, but rather He appeared in His transcendental body to perform His pastimes here.

1 If even the empowered incarnation Rsabhadeva had a spiritual body, then certainly the form of the Supreme Personality of godhead, Lord Krsna, is also transcendental and not at all material. The supremely exalted position of the Supreme Lord, Sri Krsna, is described in the following statement of Bhismadeva to Lord Krsna Srimad Bhagavatam (1.9.41): “At the Rajasuya-yajna (sacrifice) performed by Maharaja Yudhisthira, there was the greastest assembly of all the elite men of the world, the royal and learned orders, and in that great assembly Lord Sri Krsna was worshipped by one and all as the most exalted Personality of Godhead. This happened during my presence, and I remembered the incident in order to keep my mind upon the Lord.”* 2 Sridhara Svami comments: “In this verse Bhismadeva says: ‘Lord Krsna, who is the soul (atma) of all the universes, was personally present (avih) before my eyes (mama drsi gocarah). How fortunate I am.’”

1 The exalted position of Sri Krsna, the original Supreme Personality of Godhead, is also described in the following prayer spoken by Devaki-devi to Lord Krsna (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.3.24): “My dear Lord, there are different Vedas, some which describe You as unperceivable through words and the mind. Yet You are the origin of the entire cosmic manifestation. You are Brahman, the greatest of everything, full of effulgence like the sun. You have no material cause, You are free from change and deviation, and You have no material desires. Thus the Vedas say that You are the substance. Therefore, my Lord, You are directly the origin of all Vedic statements, and by understanding You, one gradually understands everything. You are different from the light of Brahman and Paramatma, yet You are not different from them. Everything emanates from You. Indeed, You are the cause of all causes, Lord Visnu, the light of all transcendental knowledge.”* 2 In this verse Devaki-devi says: ‘O Lord, the various Vedic literatures describe (prahuh) Your transcendental nature (rupam).’ What is this nature of the Lord? Devaki says: ‘O Lord, You are not perceivable to the words, mind and senses (avyaktam).’ Although the Lord cannot be perceived in these ways, nevertheless Devaki says: ‘You are Lord Visnu, the Supreme, and You are now directly present before my eyes (saksat tvam visnuh).” 3 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead can be seen by the devotees is described in the Padma Purana, Nirmana-khanda, where Veda-vyasa prays to Lord Krsna: “O Lord Madhusudana, the best of Vedic literatures proclaim that You are the eternally transcendental Supreme Brahman, the creator and master of all universes. O Lord, I wish to see You with my own eyes. Please grant me the power to see You.” 4 In this verse Devaki addresses Lord Krsna as ‘adhyatma-dipah’ (the light of all transcendental knowledge). This means that Sri Krsna illuminates the truth about all causes and effects and about the real nature of all the living entities encased in various material bodies. Because Sri Krsna is thus adhyatma-dipa, there is no need for Devaki to fear that King Kamsa may harm Him, and this truth is clearly corroborated by Sridhara Svami in his commentary.

1 The forms of the plenary expansions of Lord Krsna are also spiritual and transcendental. This is confirmed by Srila Sukadeva Gosvami (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.13.54): "The visnu-murtis all had eternal, unlimited forms, full of knowledge and bliss and existing beyond the influence of time. Their great glory was not even to be touched by the jnanis engaged in studying the Upanisads."* 2 Sridhara Svami comments: "In this verse the forms of the plenary expansions of Lord Krsna are described as being identical in their transcendental features. The word 'eka-rasah' here may be interpreted to mean either 'always the same', or 'always eternal (satya), full of knowledge (jnana), unlimited (ananta), and full of bliss (ananda).' The glory of these transcendental forms was not even to be touched (asprsta-bhuri-mahatmyah) by the jnanis engaged in studying the Upanisads (upanisad-drsam)." 3 In this verse the word 'matra' should be interpreted to mean that the various Visnu expansions described in this verse had the same external features and the same internal identity, for they were all Lord Visnu. This word should not be interpreted to mean that the various expansions were actually the impersonal featureless Brahman. Such a laboured and inappropriate interpretation clearly contradicts the statements of Srila Sukadeva Gosvami in the Bhagavatam and Srila Sridhara Svami in his commentary on the Bhagavatam. This impersonal interpretation is also refuted by the fourth line of this stanza, which states: "The great glory of these transcendental forms was not even to be touched by the impersonalist jnanis engaged in studying the Upanisads' (asprsta-bhuri-mahatmya appi hy upanisad-drsam). Srila Sukadeva Gosvami refutes this impersonal interpretation by describing the transcendental reality of the Supreme Lord's form in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.38): "The sages, headed by Sanaka Rsi, saw that the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Visnu, who was formerly visible only within their hearts in ecstatic trance, had now actually become visible to their eyes. As He came forward, accompanied by His own associates bearing all paraphernalia, such as an umbrella and a camara fan, the white bunches of hair moved very gently, like two swans, and due to their favourable breeze the pearls garlanding the umbrella also moved, like drops of nectar falling from the white full moon or ice melting due to a gust of wind."* The impersonal interpretation of the word 'matram' in this verse (10.13.54) cannot be accepted because Srila Sukadeva Gosvami, the speaker of Srimad Bhagavatam was not am impersonalist, but a great devotee of the Lord. That Sukadeva Gosvami was not an impersonalist, and that Srimad Bhagavatam does not represent the impersonalist view is confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (12.12.69): “Let me offer my respectful obeisances unto my spiritual master, the son of Vyasadeva, Sukadeva Gosvami. It is he who defeats all inauspicious things within this universe. Although in the beginning he was absorbed in the happiness of Brahman realisation and was living in a secluded place, giving up all other types of consciousness, he became attracted by the most melodious pastimes of Lord Sri Krsna. He therefore mercifully spoke the supreme Purana, known as Srimad Bhagavatam , which is the bright light of the Absolute Truth and which describes the activities of Lord Krsna.”* 4 That the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are spiritual, eternal, and full of bliss and knowledge and not simply illusory representations of an impersonal reality, is also confirmed by the following statements of Srimad Bhagavatam: “The form of the Supreme Lord is full of supremely pure transcendental knowledge.” 10.37.22 “I offer my respectful obeisances to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, whose transcendental form is full of the purest knowledge.” 10.27.11 “O Lord, Your transcendental form is eternal and full of bliss and knowledge.” 10.14.22 These statements of the Bhagavatam should be taken literally. No one should try to change their obvious meaning by word jugglery and try to make them mean something other than what they clearly say. 5 That the form of the Personality of Godhead is full of all transcendental bliss is also confirmed by the following statements of Srimad Bhagavatam: “When the ladies of Mathura saw the blissful forms of Krsna and Balarama with their eyes, they took them within their hearts and began to embrace Them to their fullest desire.”* 10.41.28 “Kubja then took Krsna’s lotus feet and placed them on her breasts, which were burning with the blazing fire of lust. By smelling the fragrance of Krsna’s lotus feet, she immediately became relieved of all lusty desires. She was thus allowed to embrace Krsna, whose transcendental form is full of bliss. She was allowed to embrace Krsna with her two arms and thus mitigate her long cherished desire to have Krsna as a visitor in her house.”* 10.48.7 6 That the forms of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are all full of knowledge and bliss is also confirmed by the Maha-Varaha Purana: “The transcendental forms of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are eternal and imperishable. They were not created at a certain point, and they are never to be destroyed. They are not products of the material energy. 7 “All the forms of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are completely filled with transcendental bliss, knowledge, and all auspicious qualities. These spiritual forms of the Lord are free from all material defects.”

1 This spiritual nature of Lord Krsna's form is also affirmed by Srila Sukadeva Gosvami (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.55): "You should know Krsna as the original soul of all atmas (living entities). For the benefit of the whole universe, He has, out of His causeless mercy, appeared as an ordinary human being. He has done this with the strength of His own internal potency."* 2 Lord Brahma describes Sri Krsna's transcendental form in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.1): "My dear Lord, You are the only worshipful Supreme Lord, Personality of Godhead; therefore I am offering my humble obeisances and prayers just to please You. Your bodily features are of the colour of clouds filled with water. You are glittering with silver electric flashes emanating from Your yellow garments. Let me offer my respectful repeated obeisances unto the son of Maharaja Nanda who is standing before me with conchshell earrings and peacock feather on His head. His face is beautiful; He is wearing a helmet, garlanded by forest flowers, and He stands with a morsel of food in His hand. He is decorated with cane, flute and a bugle made of buffalo horn. He stands before me with small lotus feet."* 3 In this verse (quoted in text 1) Srila Sukadeva Gosvami says: "Try to become learned in spiritual science and try to understand this transcendental form of Sri Krsna (avehi). Do not try to understand Sri Krsna using material logic or any tool other than devotional service. For the benefit of the whole universe (jagad-dhitaya, and in order to attract the minds of all conditioned souls to His own transcendental form, He has out of His causeless mercy (mayaya), appeared as an ordinary human being (dehivabhati) and performed His own transcendental pastimes." We may note the use of the word 'iva' (like), which indicates a difference between the nature of Lord Krsna's having a form and the conditioned soul's having a form. The difference is that the Supreme, Lord Krsna, does not accept an external material body as the conditioned soul does. 4 That the sight of the Supreme Lord's transcendental form grants the supreme benediction to the devotee is confirmed by Dhruva Maharaja (Srimad Bhagavatam 49.17): “My Lord, O Supreme Lord, You are the supreme personified form of all benediction. Therefore, for one who abides in Your devotional service with no other desire, worshipping Your lotus feet is better than becoming king and lording it over a kingdom. That is the benediction of worshipping Your lotus feet.”* 5 Srila Sridhara Svami comments: “This verse should be understood to mean ‘My Lord, O Supreme Lord (bhagavan), You are the blissful, supreme personified form of all benediction (purusartha-murteh). Your lotus feet (tava pada-padmam) are a more valuable benediction (satyasih), than the benediction (asisah) of becoming king and lording it over a kingdom.’ One may ask: ‘for whom is this benediction available?’ The answer is given ‘This supreme benediction is available to one who abides in Your devotional service with no other desire, worshipping Your lotus feet. (Anubhajatah).’”

1 That the transcendental form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is identical with the Supreme Brahman described in the Vedas is explained by Maitreya Muni (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.21.8): “Then, in the Satya-yuga, the lotus eyed Supreme Personality of Godhead, being pleased, showed Himself to that Kardama Muni and displayed His transcendental form, which can be understood only through the Vedas.”* 2 This verse means: “Then in the Satya-yuga (krte yuge), the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavan) showed Himself (darsayam asa) to that Kardama Muni (tam) and displayed His transcendental form (vapur dadhat), which is the Absolute Truth (brahma) which can be understood only through the Vedas.” In this way we conclude the description of the transcendental nature of the Supreme Lord’s form.

1 Now that we have established that the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is different in kind from the material bodies covering the conditioned souls, we may also understand that the Lord's form is not temporary and subject to the destructive influence of time, as are earthen pots and various other objects made of inert matter, that the perfect and complete transcendental form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is eternal and not subject to the six material transformations (birth, growth, maintenance, change, dwindling and destruction) is established by Lord Brahma in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.23): 2 "My conclusion is, therefore, that You are the Supreme Soul, Absolute Truth, and the supreme original person. Although You have expanded Yourself in so many Visnu forms, or in living entities and energies, by Your inconceivable transcendental potencies, You are the supreme one without a second. You are the source of the original brahmajyoti' indeed, the brahmajyoti is nothing but Your personal bodily effulgence. Your body is eternal, indestructible and full of bliss. You are also niranjana because Your pastimes, as the little son of mother Yasoda or the Lord of the gopis, are never contaminated by the material qualities. You are always complete, one without a second, and You are transcendental to both nescience and knowledge. Thus You are the original amrta, the indestructible nectar of immortality."* 3 In the beginning of Lord Brahma's prayers (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.1), Brahma explained that the form of Sri Krsna, who has a dark complexion the colour of a rain-cloud, is the most worthy object of praise. We shall now demonstrate that Sri Krsna is the supreme object of praise and, that He is the Supersoul present in all living entities, and the supreme shelter of everyone. 4 That Sri Krsna is the shelter of everyone and everything and the Supersoul present in the hearts of all living entities is confirmed by the following statements of Lord Brahma: "My dear Lord, leaving aside all other things and just considering today's happenings - what I have seen - are they not all due to Your inconceivable energies? First of all I saw You alone; thereafter You expanded Yourself as Your friends, the calves and all the existence of Vrndavana; then I saw You and all the boys as four-handed Visnus and They were being worshipped by all the elements and demigods, including myself. Again They were all wound up and You remained alone as You were before. Does this not mean that You are the Supreme Lord, Narayana, the origin of everything, and from you everything emanates, and again everything enters into You, and You remain the same as before?"* Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.18 "You should know Krsna as the original soul of all atmas (living entities). For the benefit of the whole universe, He has, out of His causeless mercy, appeared as an ordinary human being. He has done this with the strength of His own internal potency."* Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.55 5 In this verse Srila Sukadeva Gosvami intends to say: "O Krsna, because You are the Supersoul present in the hearts of all living entities, it should be understood that You are eternal, and because You are the ultimate shelter upon which everything rests, whatever is eternal is so because of Your eternality. You are the original abode of all eternality." 6 That Sri Krsna is the resting place of all immortality is confirmed by the demigods, who offer the following prayer to Lord Krsna (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.2.26): "O Lord, You never deviate from Your vow, which is always perfect because whatever You decide is perfectly correct and cannot be stopped by anyone. Being present in the three phases of cosmic manifestation - creation, maintenance and annihilation - You are the Supreme Truth. Indeed, unless one is completely truthful, one cannot achieve Your favour, which therefore cannot be achieved by hypocrites. You are the active principle, the real truth, in all the ingredients of creation, and therefore you are known as antaryami, the inner force. You are equal to everyone, and Your instructions apply for everyone, for all time. You are the beginning of all truth. Therefore, offering our obeisances, we surrender unto you. Kindly give us protection."* 7 That Sri Krsna is the original source of all eternality is confirmed by the following statement of Mahabharata (Udyama-parva 70.12): "All eternality is situated within the Supreme Eternal Lord Krsna. Because all eternality has its source in Him, He is therefore known by the name satya (the eternal).” 8 That Sri Krsna is completely free from the material transformations (birth, growth, maintenance, change, dwindling, and destruction) is confirmed by Lord Brahma (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.23): “O My Lord, You are the origin of everything (adya).” Lord Brahma’s statement in Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.18 also confirms that Lord Krsna never undergoes the transformation known as birth. That Lord Krsna is never actually born is confirmed by Padma Purana: “Although Lord Hari appears before the eyes of His devotees, He never undergoes the material transformation known as birth.” 9 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Krsna, never undergoes the transformation known as birth is also confirmed by the following statement of Skanda Purana: “Fools do not understand the truth about the blissful, eternal and unchanging Supreme Personality of Godhead, the cause of all causes. They mistakenly think that the Supreme Lord has taken birth in a material body composed of the five elements. He actually never takes birth.” 10 That Sri Krsna is the origin of everything and the oldest is confirmed by Lord Brahma (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.23): “O Lord, You are the oldest, the original person (purusah puranah).” From this we may understand that Lord Krsna always existed. He existed before the creation of the material world in an eternally youthful body. Although He is the oldest, He remains eternally youthful. 11 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead existed before the creation of the material universes is confirmed in Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad (1.4.1): “The Supreme Personality of Godhead existed before the creation of the material universes.” 12 In this way it may be seen that Sri Krsna is free from the material transformations of birth. The second material transformation is maintenance. That Sri Krsna is free from any consideration of maintenance is confirmed by Brahma in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.23): “O Lord Krsna, You are always perfect and complete (purna).” Because Lord Krsna is always perfect, he never grows (the third transformation). “The fourth material transformation is change. Brahma confirms that Sri Krsna is free from change in the following words (from the same Bhagavatam verse): “O Lord Krsna, You are eternally full of all transcendental bliss (ajasra-sukha).” Because Lord Krsna is always blissful His condition of life never changes. 13 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is full of bliss is also confirmed by the following statement of Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad (3.9.28): “The Supreme Godhead is full of all knowledge and bliss.” We may note that in this statement the neuter word ‘ananda’ is used instead of the masculine word ‘sukha’. 14 The fifth material transformation is dwindling. Brahma confirms that Sri Krsna is free from dwindling in these words (from the same Bhagavatam verse): “O Lord Krsna, You are eternally free from decay and diminution (aksaya).” The sixth material transformation is destruction. Brahma confirms that Sri Krsna is free from destruction in the following words (from the same Bhagavatam verse): “O Lord Krsna, You are never to be destroyed. You are eternal (amrta).” 15 Lord Krsna’s perfection and completeness are described by Brahma in the following words (from the same Bhagavatam verse): “O Lord Krsna, You are unlimited and one without a second (ananta and advaya).” This means that Sri Krsna is beyond all limitations of time, space and size and nothing can exist without the manifestation of His potencies. In order to prove that Sri Krsna is eternal, Brahma explains that Sri Krsna is beyond the four kinds of result (birth, attainment of ends, change, and purification) which follow the actions of the conditioned souls. That Sri Krsna is not born (the first result), Brahma explains by the statement: “O Lord Krsna, You are the origin of everything (adyah).” The second result of work is the attainment of some end, which may be done either with physical endeavour, or as a result of knowledge. Sri Krsna does not need to endeavour physically to attain any end, for as Brahma says, He is the ‘all pervading Supersoul (atma), and at the same time Krsna does not need to undergo meditation or mental speculation to obtain some end, as the impersonalist philosophers do, because He is Himself the ‘origin of the Brahmajyoti (svayam-jyoti)’, as Brahma says. The third result of work is change. Sri Krsna is free from change because, as Brahma says here, ‘He never accepts a changing material body (upadhito mukta).’ The fourth result of work is purification. Sri Krsna is never in need of purification because, as Brahma says ‘He is always free from all contamination (niranjana).’ In this way Sri Krsna remains aloof from the four kinds of results of work. 16 That Sri Krsna and His transcendental abode may be directly perceived by the devotees is explained in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (2.9.22), where the Supreme Personality of Godhead says to Lord Brahma: “The highest perfectional ingenuity is the personal perception of My abodes, and this has been possible because of your submissive attitude in the performance of severe penance according to My order.”* 17 Sridhara Svami comments: “In this verse Lord Krsna says to Brahma: ‘By My mercy you are able to see this. Because I wish it, You may now directly perceive this (manisita).’ One may ask: ‘What is it that Brahma is able to see by the Lord’s mercy?’ The answer is given: ‘You are now able to see My own abode (mama lokavalokanam yat).’” 18 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead reveals Himself to his devotes is also confirmed in the Narayanadhyatmya: “Although the Supreme Personality of Godhead generally remains invisible, He may nevertheless be seen through the agency of His own transcendental potency.” 19 At this point someone may object: “Is it not so that in the description of His opulences in Srimad Bhagavatam (11.16.29) the Personality of Godhead said: ‘among exalted persons (bhagavan) I appear as the son of Maharaja Vasudeva?’ Is it not also so that at the end of this description of His opulences, the Supreme Lord said: ‘These opulences of Mine are all transformations of the mind?’ Clearly, from this we may understand that the form of Lord Krsna, the son of Vasudeva, is not the original Personality of Godhead, but rather the expansion of one of His opulences. Furthermore, does not the second quote establish the truth that the form of Lord Krsna and the other opulences of the Absolute Truth described in this passage, are not transcendental forms, but merely transformations of the material thinking process?" To this objection I reply: My dear friend, these quotes are very nice, of course, but just as the sentence 'chatrino gacchanti' is ambiguous and requires some explanation before it is properly understood, in the same way, these verse Srimad Bhagavatam require an elaborate explanation before they are properly understood. 20 In this connection we may note the use of the word 'param' in the following verse from the same section of Srimad Bhagavatam (11.16.37), where Lord Krsna says: "I am form, taste, aroma, touch and sound; false ego; the mahat-tattva; earth, water, fire, air and sky; the living entity; material nature; the modes of goodness, passion and ignorance. All these items, along with knowledge of their individual symptoms and the steady conviction that results from this knowledge, represents me." 21 We may note that in this verse the word 'param' refers to the Supreme Absolute Truth, According to this interpretation, then, the Supreme Brahman is counted among the opulences of the Lord, which are further described as (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.16.41) 'transformations of the mind'. Such an explanation of the nature of Brahman will clearly not satisfy those who are aware of the actual meaning of Vedic literatures. Brahman is not a material transformation. Brahman is free from any material covering or material external form, just as a threshed grain of rice is free from the external husk. This transcendental nature of Brahman is explained by the following statements of Srimad Bhagavatam: "O Supreme Lord, You are free from material coverings." 10.14.23 "I offer my respectful obeisances to the Supreme Lord, whose form is full of the purest transcendental knowledge." 10.37.22 22 Because this passage from the Eleventh Canto of Srimad Bhagavatam appears to explain that the Supreme Brahman, and Lord Krsna, the son of Vasudeva are opulences of the Supreme and are simply material transformations of the mind, it should be understood that these statements (for at least this interpretation of them) contradict the description of the Supreme Brahman and Lord Krsna in the other passages of Vedic literature. Therefore, I say that these statement are not exactly true. There are some examples of passages in Vedic literatures that are not exactly true. One such statement is the following verse spoken by Bhismadeva (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.9.34): "On the battlefield (where Sri Krsna attended Arjuna out of friendship), the flowing hair of Lord Krsna turned ashen due to the dust raised by the hoofs of the horses. And because of His labour, beads of sweat wetted His face. All these descriptions intensified by the wounds dealt by my sharp arrows, were enjoyed by Him let my mind thus go unto Sri Krsna."* Because the transcendental body of Lord Krsna can never be hurt or pierced by any weapon, it should be understood that the description of this pastime should not be taken as truth but is a specific illusion arranged by the Lord. 23 An example of a statement contrary to the truth, but yet given in Srimad Bhagavatam, is mentioned in the following statement of Sukadeva Gosvami (in connection with Krsna's lamentation during His battle with Salva) Srimad Bhagavatam 10.77.30): "O King Pariksit, although Krsna lamented when Salva attempted to trick Him into thinking that His father,

Vasudeva, was killed, we should understand that in actuality, Lord Krsna was not at all fooled, and he did not lament. Although some sages may say that the Lord lamented, such statements are not fit to be accepted as truth."* 24 That the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is spiritual and free from all material defects is also confirmed by the following statement of Skanda Purana: "Lord Visnu is completely aloof from the influence of the material energy. He is eternal, imperishable, unbreakable, undefeatable, and undecaying. He appears in this world and enjoys pastimes with His devotees. He pretends to be an ordinary human being, and in this role He may sometimes appear to be bound with ropes, or to bleed when wounded. Although these activities bewilder the demons, the liberated souls do not become bewildered. They always understand the actual nature of the Lord." 25 As he was fighting with Krsna, Bhismadeva became momentarily overwhelmed by a demonic thought of harming Krsna, and in this way he became bewildered into thinking that Krsna has become wounded. Later Bhisma remembered that bewilderment as one remembers a painful nightmare, and He expressed that memory in the verse quoted previously (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.9.34). 26 Someone may ask: "How is it that Lord Krsna became so pure and free from material contamination that He could not be wounded or bleed? Did He come under the influence of some wonderfully purifying substance, or did He assiduously rid Himself of all impurities?" In answer to this question I explain: Sri Krsna is eternally pure and does not require to do something to become free from contamination. He did not require to come under the influence of some purifying agent because He is Himself perfect and complete, and therefore everything that purifies is already present within Him. In this the same way He does not require to rid Himself of impurities, since impurities can never enter Him, as Lord Brahma explains (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.23): 'O Lord Krsna, You are always free from all kinds of material contamination (niranjana)." In this way it may be understood that the form of Sri Krsna is always uncontaminated and full of pure transcendental knowledge.

In this way we have explained that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is naturally endowed with innumerable powers and opulences. Just as light has certain natural qualities opposite to the nature of darkness, in the same way the Personality of Godhead has a host of transcendental qualities different from the qualities of matter. We have also established that the Personality of Godhead is supremely perfect and complete because He is the master of all potencies. All of His qualities are eternal and He is full of all transcendental bliss. Because He is the reservoir in which all transcendental qualities, powers and opulences rest, He is known as the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavan). Just as laddu candy is by nature aromatic and has certain natural attributes that cannot be separated from it, in the same way the Supreme Personality of Godhead possesses a host of wonderful transcendental attributes. The form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is accepted by the most learned transcendentalists as the highest manifestation of the Absolute Truth. This is confirmed by the following prayer of Lord Brahma to Sri Krsna Srimad Bhagavatam (3.9.2): “The form which I see is eternally freed from material contamination and has advented to show mercy to the devotees as manifestation of internal potency. This incarnation is the origin of many other incarnations, and I am born from the lotus flower grown from Your navel home."*

1 In this way we have proven that the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is perfect and complete in all respects. However, in order to even more firmly establish this fact, we shall now describe the Lord's ornaments and paraphernalia. In the following statement Srila Sukadeva Gosvami describes the Supreme Lord appearance in this world along with His own transcendental ornaments and paraphernalia (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.3.9): "Vasudeva then saw the newborn child, who had very wonderful lotus like eyes and who bore in His four hands the four weapons sankha, cakra, gada and padma. On His chest was the mark of Srivatsa and so His neck the brilliant Kaustubha gem. Dressed in yellow, His body blackish like a dense cloud, His scattered hair fully grown, and His helmet and earrings sparkling uncommonly with the valuable gem Vaidurya, the child, decorated with a brilliant belt, armlets, bangles and other ornaments, appeared very wonderful."* 2 The ornaments and paraphernalia of the Lord are in one sense non different from His transcendental form. Visvarupa explains this to Maharaja Indra in the following words Srimad Bhagavatam (8.8.32-33): "The Supreme Personality of Godhead, the living entities, the material energy, the spiritual energy and the entire creation are all individual substances. In the ultimate analysis, however, together they constitute the supreme one, the Personality of Godhead. Therefore those who are advanced in spiritual knowledge see unity in diversity. For such advanced persons, the Lord's bodily decorations, His name, His fame, His attributes and forms and the weapons in His hand are manifestations of the strength of His potency. According to their elevated spiritual understanding, the omniscient Lord, who manifests various forms, is present everywhere. May He always protect us everywhere from all calamities."* 3 In this verse Visvarupa says: "Those who are advanced in spiritual knowledge see unity in diversity (aikatmyanubhavanam). The Supreme Personality of Godhead appears before these advanced transcendentalists in His form full of the nectar of (mayaya) appears before His devotees in His own transcendental form full of all wonderful potencies, so He also displays to them His bodily decorations (bhusana), His name, His fame, His attributes, and forms and weapons in His hand, which are all the manifestations of the strength of His potency (saktih). These great transcendentalists directly perceive the true nature of the Lord and His paraphernalia (satya-manena). The Lord, who manifest as various wonderful forms (sarvaih svarupaih) is present everywhere. May He always protect (patu) us (nah) everywhere from all calamities." 4 In the following verses of the Visnu-dharma Purana, Maharaja Bali offers prayers to the Lord's Sudarsana Cakra: "Even the greatest of yogis cannot completely or properly glorify the Lord's Sudarsana Cakra. Because of the illumination of this whirling Cakra, this demon Bali has been able to see the entire universe with its three planetary systems of Bhur, Bhuvar and Svar-lokas." 5 Maharaja Ambarisa's prayers to the Sudarsana Cakra are recorded in the Ninth Canto of Srimad Bhagavatam, and the reader is referred to them for a more elaborate description. In various places in the Vedic literatures, the Sudarsana Cakra, flag of Garuda, and other paraphernalia of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, are described as 'causeless'. This means that the Lord's paraphernalia is transcendental and has no material origin, just as the Lord Himself has no origin. 6 Lord Kapiladeva describes some of the Lord's ornaments and paraphernalia (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.28.28): 'The yogi should meditate upon His club which is named Kaumodaki and is very dear to him. This club smashes the demons, who are always inimical soldiers, and is smeared with their blood. One should concentrate on the nice garland on the neck of the Lord, which is always surrounded by bumblebees, with their nice buzzing sound, and one should meditate upon the pearl necklace on the Lord's neck, which is considered to represent the pure living entities who are always engaged in His service."* 7 The Lord's Kaustubha gem is described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (12.13.10): "The unborn Supreme Personality of godhead wears His own Brahman effulgence in the form of the Kaustubha jewel on His chest."* 8 As the Supreme Personality of Godhead is willing to be considered non different from the universe in order to facilitate the conditioned souls' worship of Him, so the Kaustubha gem is considered non different from the transcendental form of the Personality of Godhead. 9 That the Kaustubha gem is non different from the transcendental form of the Personality of Godhead is also confirmed by Visnu Purana: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Hari, personally appears as the Kaustubha gem, which is pure, free from all contamination of this material world, and untouched by the modes of material nature."

1 The spiritual world of Vaikunthaloka is non different from the Lord in the same way, and it is repeatedly described in the Vedic literatures so the slow witted conditioned souls may become aware of its existence. For example, Vaikunthaloka is described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (2.9.9): “The Personality of Godhead, being thus very much satisfied with the penance of Lord Brahma was pleased to manifest His personal abode, Vaikuntha, the supreme planet above all others. This transcendental abode of the Lord is adored by all self-realised persons freed from all kinds of miseries and fear of illusory existence.”* 2 Because the spiritual world of Vaikuntha cannot be reached by ordinary materially pious activities, because the Vedic literatures explain that it is beyond the limits of the material creation, because it is glorified as that place in which the residents do not fall into the illusion of maya, because it is reached when one become unaffected by the three modes of material nature, because by entering a temple of Lord Visnu even in this material world, one actually enters the spiritual world, and consequently becomes free from the touch of the three modes of material nature, therefore it should be understood that the spiritual world of Vaikuntha is actually a manifestation of the spiritual form of the Personality of Godhead, that the material energy, that it is eternal, that it may be obtained only by devotional service which eclipses the so-called happiness of liberation, and that it is full of eternity, knowledge and bliss. 3 That the realm of Vaikuntha cannot be obtained by material activities, pious or otherwise, is confirmed by the Supreme Lord in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.24.12-14): “Heaven was established as the residence of the demigods. Bhuvarloka as that of the ghostly spirits and the earth system as the place of human beings and other mortal creatures. Those mystics who strive for liberation are promoted beyond these three divisions.” 4 “Lord Brahma created the region below the earth for the demons and the Naga snakes. Thus the destinations of the three worlds were all arranged as the corresponding reactions for different kinds of work performed within the three modes of material nature. 5 “By mystic yoga, great austerities and the renounced order of life, the pure destinations of Maharloka, Janoloka, Tapoloka and Satyaloka are attained. But by devotional yoga, one achieves My transcendental abode.” 6 In these verses the Lord says: “Those mystics who strive for liberation (siddhanam) by performance of mystic yoga and other spiritual activities are promoted beyond (param) these three divisions (trtayat) of planetary systems (Bhurloka, Bhuvarloka, and Svarloka). Thus the destinations of the three worlds (trilokyam) were all arranged as the corresponding reactions for different kinds of work (karmanam) performed by those attached to household life. By practicing upakurvana-brahmacarya one attains Maharloka, by naisthika-brahmacarya one attains Janaloka, by vanaprastha life one attains Tapoloka and by sannyasa one attains Satyaloka. In this way the various results of yoga-practice are calculated.” 7 That the Personality of Godhead’s own abode (mad-gatih), known as Vaikunthaloka, can only be attained by the devotional activities of bhakti-yoga (such as hearing and chanting the glories of Vaikuntha and the master of Vaikuntha), and by no other means, is explained in Srimad Bhagavatam (3.15.23): “It is very much regrettable that unfortunate people do not discuss the description of the Vaikuntha planets but engage in topics which are unworthy to hear and which bewilder one’s intelligence. Those who give up topics of Vaikuntha and take to talk of the material world are thrown into the darkest region of ignorance.”* 8 A further description of Vaikunthaloka is found in Srimad Bhagavatam (3.15.20), where Lord Brahma says to the demigods: “The inhabitants of Vaikuntha travel in their airplanes made of lapis lazuli, emerald and gold. Although crowded by their consorts, who have large hips and beautiful smiling faces, they cannot be stimulated to passion by their mirth and beautiful charms."* 9 Sridhara Svami comments on this verse in the following words: "This verse explains: "The inhabitants of Vaikuntha travel in their airplanes (vimanaih) which they obtained simply by offering obeisances to the lotus feet of Lord Hari, the Supreme Personality of Godhead (hari-padanati-matra-drstaih).' Thus they are able to travel in Vaikuntha by means of their devotional activities, and not by any kind of material fruitive activity." 10 The realm of Vaikuntha is also described in Mundaka Upanisad (1.2.12): "When a person aspiring to advance in spiritual life examines the temporary benefits obtained by performing pious deeds and earning a temporary residence in the upper material planets, he understands that one cannot attain the Personality of Godhead by performing materially pious deeds, and He becomes disinterested in both fruitive Vedic sacrifices and material welfare work." 11 That the spiritual world of Vaikuntha can be obtained only by devotional service to the Personality of Godhead is also personally confirmed by Lord Krsna in the following words (Bhagavad-gita 18.61-62): "The Supreme Lord is situated in everyone's heart, O Arjuna, and is directing the wanderings of all living entities, who are seated as on a machine made of the material energy."* 12 "O scion of Bharata, surrender unto Him utterly. By His grace you will attain transcendental peace and the supreme eternal abode."*

1 That the spiritual Vaikuntha planets are situated beyond the material world is confirmed by Lord Siva in the following words spoken to the Pracetas (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.24.29): “A person who executes his occupational duty properly for one hundred births becomes qualified to occupy the post of Brahma, and if he becomes more qualified, he can approach Lord Siva. A person who is directly surrendered to Lord Krsna, or Visnu, in unalloyed devotional service is immediately promoted to the spiritual planets. Lord Siva and other demigods attain these planets after the destruction of this material world.”* 2 Sridhara Svami comments on this verse in the following words: “In this verse Lord Siva says: ‘One who has accumulated the results of many pious actions may attain My association (mam eti) after he gives up the present body. A devotee of Krsna, however, is immediately promoted to the spiritual planets (vaisnavam padam), which are beyond the boundaries of this material world.’ “That the Supreme Lord and His name, form, attributes and abode are all beyond the boundaries of the matter is confirmed by the Supreme Lord Himself in the following words (Chandogya Upanisad 6.3.32): “Although My name and form are generally not visible in this material world, I shall now reveal them.’ “In the Bhagavatam verse, Lord Siva continues: (Lord Siva), and the other administrative demigods (vibudhah) attain these spiritual planets after the destruction of this material world (kalatyaye).’ This last point is confirmed by the following statement of Vedanta-sutra (3.3.33): “The administrative demigods are appointed to certain terms of office, and they remain in this material world for the duration of those terms. When their terms expire they may enter the spiritual world.”

1 That the residents of Vaikunthaloka do not fall down into the material world is described by Lord Kapila (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.25.37-38): “Thus because he is completely absorbed in thought of Me, the devotee does not desire even the highest benediction obtainable in the upper planetary systems, including Satyaloka. He does not desire the eight material perfections obtained from mystic yoga, nor does he desire to be elevated to the kingdom of God. Yet even without desiring them, the devotee enjoys, even in this life, all the offered benedictions.* 2 “The Lord continued: My dear mother, devotees who receive such transcendental opulences are never bereft of them; neither weapons nor the change of time can destroy such opulences. Because the devotees accept Me as their friend, their relative, their son, preceptor, benefactor and Supreme Deity, they cannot be deprived of their possessions at any time.”* 3 In this verse Lord Kapiladeva says: “Those devotees, who, by My mercy have become free from ignorance, do not desire the greatest opulences and enjoyments available in the material world (vibhutim). They do not desire the eight material perfections (beginning with anima-siddhi) obtained from mystic yoga (aisvaryam astangam anupravrttam). They do not desire opulence equal (sarsti) to that of the Supreme Lord (bhagavatim sriyam). Although the devotees only desire the happiness of devotional service, nevertheless they attain (asnuvate) all these benedictions in the spiritual world of Vaikuntha (me loke).” This statement shows the Supreme Lord’s great affection for His devotees. 4 That although the devotee never prays for material opulence the Supreme Lord nevertheless showers all benedictions on him is seen in the following description of the benedictions granted to Sudama the florist (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.41.51-52): “When the florist was offered benediction, he begged from the Lord that he might remain His servant in devotional service and by such service do good to all living creatures. Being satisfied with the florist, Lord Krsna not only gave him benediction for whatever he wanted, but over and above that, He offered him all material opulences, family prosperity, long duration of life, and whatever else his heart desired within the material world.”* 5 The devotees of the Lord are always unattached to all kinds of opulences. As has already been explained, the devotees do not wish for any spiritual opulence that may be granted by the Lord’s mercy, or any material opulences, up to the opulences Brahmaloka, which may be granted by the Lord’s illusory potency maya. Even though the devotees are granted all kinds of opulence they do not try to enjoy or exploit them, for they consider them very insignificant and not worth their attention. 6 The desirelessness of the devotees is described in Chandogya Upanisad (8.1.6): “The auspicious situation pious deeds grant in this life will eventually be destroyed, and in the same way the auspicious situation pious deeds grant in the next life will also eventually be destroyed. Understanding the temporary nature of these material benedictions, and also understanding the truth about the all-pervading Supersoul, the devotees only desire eternal benefits in relation to the Personality of Godhead. They pass through all kinds of material situations free from all material desires.” 7 At this point someone may object: “Is it not so that in Svargaloka or any other planet both the objects of enjoyment and the enjoyers of those objects will eventually be destroyed? Is this not true also for the devotees and their object of enjoyment? Lord Kapila answers this objection when He says (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.25.38): “In the changeless (santa-rupe) spiritual world of Vaikuntha My devotees are never bereft (na nanksyanti) of transcendental opulences. My personal weapon (me hetih) the wheel of time (animisah), cannot swallow up (no ledhi) their opulences.” That the residents of Vaikunthaloka are never deprived of their opulences and auspicious condition of life is also confirmed by the following statement of Chandogya Upanisad (8.15.1): “Once having entered the spiritual world of Vaikuntha one never returns to the material world.” 8 That the residents of Vaikunthaloka never return to the material world is confirmed by Lord Krsna Himself in Bhagavad-gita (8.16): “From the highest planet in the material world down to the lowest, all are places of misery wherein repeated birth and death take place. But one who attains My abode, O son of Kunti, never takes birth again.”* 9 This is also described by Sripada Sankaracarya in these words (Sri-Visnu-sahasra-nama-bhasya, text 75): “In the Supreme (param) abode (ayanam), there is no fear of returning to the material world. The word used here is a bahuvrihi-samasa in the masculine gender.” 10 Lord Kapiladeva’s glorification of the devotee residents of Vaikuntha does not stop here, however, but the Lord continues by explaining that the devotees love only the Supreme Personality of Godhead. He is their sole object of love. This explanation does not only apply to the residents of Vaikunthaloka, but it may also be taken to describe the eternal cowherd residents of Goloka Vrndavana, who also consider Lord Krsna to be the sole object of their love. 11 At this point someone may ask: “When the living entities become free from the ignorance of materialism what different varieties of love for the Personality of Godhead do they manifest?” To answer this question Lord Kapila says: “Some devotees (yesam), such as the sages described in Padma Purana Uttara-khanda, desire to approach Me as their dear master, and as a result they meditate on Me as their dear (priya) master. Some devotees, such as the Four Kumaras and others, desire to see Me as the Supreme Brahman (atma), and they meditate on Me in that way. In whatever way the devotee wish to love Me, they may approach Me in that way.” We may note that in this verse the word ‘suhrdah’ (friend and benefactor) is in the plural. This means that there are many different kinds of friends and the Lord is willing to become any one of many different kinds of friends for His devotee. The exchange of friendship between the Lord and the devotees is described by Narada Muni in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam (4.12.37): 12 “Persons who are peaceful, equipoised, cleansed and purified, and who know the art of pleasing all other living entities, keep friendship only with the Lord and His devotees; they alone can very easily achieve the perfection of going back home, back to Godhead.”*

That Vaikunthaloka is beyond the material cosmos, and that no one falls from Vaikuntha to the material world, are both described by Srila Suta Gosvami in Srimad Bhagavatam (12.11.19): “O Brahmanas, the realm of Vaikuntha is a great umbrella that gives protection from all kinds of fear.”

By becoming free from the influence of the three modes of material nature only may enter the spiritual world of Vaikuntha. The Supreme Personality of Godhead confirms this by saying (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.25.22): “Those immersed in the mode of goodness go to the higher planets known as Svarloka, those immersed in the mode of passion enter human society in the middle planetary systems, those immersed in the mode of ignorance go to the hellish worlds, and those who are free from the grip of the three modes attain Me.” We may note that instead of saying ‘they attain My planet’, the Lord says ‘they attain Me’. The Lord speaks in this way in order to proclaim that He is not different from His transcendental abode.

1 That the spiritual world of Vaikuntha is beyond the touch of the three modes of material nature is confirmed by Lord Krsna Himself in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.25.25): “Residential quarters within the forest are in the mode of goodness, residential quarters in big cities, towns and villages are in the mode of passion, and residential quarters in an atmosphere wherein indulgence in the four sinful activities of illicit sex, intoxication, meat-eating, and gambling predominate are in the mode of ignorance, but My abode is free from the material modes.”* 2 That the spiritual world of Vaikuntha is superior to the material world is confirmed by Lord Krsna in Srimad Bhagavatam (10.88.25-26): “Lord Siva finally entered the splendid world of Svetadvipa Vaikuntha, where Lord Narayana personally resides, and which is beyond the darkness of matter. In Svetadvipa there are great saintly persons who are completely freed from the envious nature of the material world and are beyond the jurisdiction of the four principles of material activities, namely religiousness, economic development, sense-gratification and liberation. Anyone who enters into that Vaikuntha planet never comes back again to this material world.”*

1 Speaking to Narada, Lord brahma describes the eternality of Vaikunthaloka in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.5.39): “From the forefront of the chest up to the neck of the universal form of the Lord are situated the planetary systems named Janaloka and Tapoloka, whereas Satyaloka, the topmost planetary system is, situated on the head of the form. The spiritual planets, however, are eternal.”* 2 Srila Sridhara Svami comments on this verse: “In this verse the word ‘brahmaloka’ refers to the eternal (sanatana) Vaikuntha planets. Here the word ‘brahmaloka; does not refer to any planet within the created material universe’. Here the word ‘brahmaloka’ means ‘spiritual (brahma) planet (loka)’.

1 That Vaikunthaloka may be obtained only by the practice of intense devotional service, which makes the happiness of liberation seem insignificant in comparison, is explained by the Four Kumaras in Srimad Bhagavatam (3.15.23 and 25): “It is very much regrettable that unfortunate people do not discuss the description of the Vaikuntha planets but engage in topics which are unworthy to hear and which bewilder one’s intelligence. Those who give up the topics of Vaikuntha and take to talk of the material world are thrown into the darkest region of ignorance.* 2 “Persons whose bodily features change in ecstasy and who breathe heavily and perspire due to hearing the glories of the Lord are promoted to the kingdom of God, even though they do not care for meditation and other austerities. The kingdom of God is above the material universes, and it is desired by Brahma and other demigods.”* 3 The first part of this verse may be interpreted ‘yac ca nah’ (Vaikunthaloka is situated above us), or ‘nah sprhaniya-silah’ (we desire to attain the good qualities possessed by the great devotees). The great devotees are described in the following words: ‘dure yamah’ (Because they have already attained all spiritual perfection, these great devotees do not care for meditation and other austerities), and ‘bhartu mithah su-yasasah’ (These great devotees are constantly engaged in hearing the glories of the Lord). These great devotees are promoted (vrajanti) to the kingdom of God on the strength of their intense devotional service, which makes even the happiness of liberation seem insignificant by comparison. 4 That devotional service to the Supreme Personality of Godhead makes the happiness of liberation seem insignificant is also confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (3.15.48): “Persons who are very expert and most intelligent in understanding things as they are engage in hearing narrations of the auspicious activities and pastimes of the Lord, which are worth chanting and worth hearing. Such persons do not care even for the highest material benediction, namely liberation, to say nothing of other less important benedictions like the material happiness of the heavenly kingdom.”*

1 That the spiritual world of Vaikuntha is eternal, full of knowledge and full of bliss is confirmed by the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.20.37): “Those who seriously follow the methods of achieving Me that I have personally taught attain freedom from illusion and upon reaching My personal abode can at last perfectly understand the Absolute Truth.” 2 “Jnana-yoga, karma-yoga and bhakti-yoga are the spiritual paths (me pathah) mentioned here by the Lord. Because it is the most practical and effective at all times, places and circumstances, the devotees consider bhakti-yoga the best of all spiritual paths. The word ‘ksemam’ in this verse indicates that the Vaikunthaslokas are filled with the supreme auspiciousness of pure devotional service, and the words ‘mat-sthanam paramam brahma viduh’ indicate that the great sages understand that the spiritual abode of the Lord is non different from the Lord Himself. 3 The spiritual world of Vaikunthaloka is described in the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (10.28.15-16): “Reflecting in this way, the merciful and all-powerful Personality of Godhead showed His own planet, which is above the darkness of material existence, to the cowherd men of Vrndavana.* 4 “Thus Krsna showed them the effulgent, eternal, ever-existing spiritual sky, which is unlimited and full of knowledge. Great sages and saintly persons who have already surpassed the influence of the three material modes of nature are able to directly see that spiritual world.”* 5 Both these quotations (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.20.37 and 10.28.14-15) clearly explain that the spiritual abode of Lord Krsna is beyond the influence of the material energy. The supposition that the word ‘ca’ (also) is understood, although not expressed in these verses, and that therefore these verses mean ‘the abode of Lord Krsna and the spiritual world’, and that therefore the abode of Lord Krsna is different from the eternal spiritual world, is an extremely forced and illogical misinterpretation of what is clearly said in these verses. That this abode of Lord Krsna is non different from the spiritual world of Vaikuntha is also confirmed by Srila Sridhara Svami, who explains in his commentary on this verse: “The words ‘tamasah param’ in this verse indicate that the abode of Lord Krsna is beyond the darkness of material existence.”

1 The spiritual abode of Lord Krsna is further described by Srila Sukadeva Gosvami in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.2.17-18): “In that transcendental state of labdopasanti, there is no supremacy of devastating time, which controls even the celestial demigods who are empowered to rule over mundane creatures. (And what to speak of the demigods themselves?) Nor is there the mode of material goodness, nor passion, nor ignorance, nor even the false ego, nor the material Causal Ocean, nor the material nature.* 2 “The transcendentalists desire to avoid everything godless, for they know that supreme situation in which everything is related with the Supreme Lord Visnu. Therefore a pure devotee who is in absolute harmony with the Lord does not create perplexities, but worships the lotus feet of the Lord at every moment, taking them into His heart.”* 3 In this verse Srila Sukadeva Gosvami says: ‘The transcendentalists desire to avoid (icchavah) everything godless (atat, dauratmyam), such as the useless speculations of the nyaya-logicians (neti neti), and the impersonalist fallacy that the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the individual jiva living entities are identical in all respects. Abandoning all these misconceptions, they embrace (upaguhya) the lotus feet (padam) of the supremely worshipable (arha) Personality of Godhead within their hearts (hrda) at every moment (pade pade). In this way the saintly devotees repose all their love in the Supreme Personality of Godhead and in no one else. Such devotees understand (amananti) the truth about the spiritual abode of the Supreme Lord Visnu (yat tad vaisnavam padam)”. By explaining that the devotees repose all their love in the Supreme Lord, this verse clearly refutes the misconception that the Absolute Truth is formless and impersonal, for it is not possible to love a formless non person. 4 The impersonalists’ idea that God is formless is clearly rejected by the author of the Mukta-phala-tika in his explanation of this verse, where he explains the relation between the demigods and the Supreme Personality of Godhead in the following words: “As a king establishes places of residence for his different subjects, while He reserves the best residence for himself, so the Supreme Personality of Godhead establishes the residence of Brahma and all the other living entities within the universe, while His own residence is the best, for it is above (param) the influence of the material energy.” 5 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead remains in His own glorious realm, the world of Vaikuntha, is confirmed by the following statements of the Sruti-sastra: “Where does the Supreme Personality of Godhead reside? He resides in His own glorious abode.” Chandogya Upanisad 7.24.1 “Who can properly understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead who resides in His own transcendental abode?" Katha Upanisad 1.2.25

1 The rhetorical question “Who can properly understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead who resides in His own transcendental abode?” is answered in the following statement of Narada Muni to Maharaja Pracinabarhi (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.29.48): “Those who are less intelligent accept the Vedic ritualistic ceremonies as all in all. They do not know that the purpose of the Vedas is to understand one’s own home, where the Supreme Personality of Godhead lives. Not being interested in their real home, they are illusioned and search after other homes.”* 2 In this verse Narada says: “Those who are less intelligent (dhumra-dhiyah) accept (ahuh) the Vedic ritualistic ceremonies (vedam sa-karmakam) as all in all. They know of Svargaloka and the other planets of the material universe, but they do not know that the purpose of the Vedas is to understand one’s own home (svam lokam) where (yatra) the Supreme Personality of Godhead (janardanah) lives.”

1 The presence of the Personality of Godhead in the spiritual world is also described in the following prayer spoken by the demigods to Lord Hari (Srimad Bhagavatam 6.9.32): “O Supreme Personality of Godhead, O Narayana, O Vasudeva, original person! O most exalted person, supreme experience, welfare personified! O supreme benediction, supremely merciful and changeless! O support of the cosmic manifestation, sole proprietor of all planetary systems, master of everything and husband of the goddess of fortune! Your Lordship is realised by the topmost sannyasis, who wander about the world to preach Krsna consciousness, fully absorbed in samadhi through bhakti-yoga. Because their minds are concentrated upon You, they can receive the conception of Your personality in their fully purified hearts. When the darkness in their hearts is completely eradicated and You are revealed to them, the transcendental bliss they enjoy is the transcendental form of Your Lordship present in the spiritual world. No one but such persons can realise You. Therefore we simply offer You our respectful obeisances.” 2 In this passage of Srimad Bhagavatam the word ‘tamah’ may be interpreted to mean either ‘material energy’ or ‘ignorance’. The word ‘atma-loke’ means ‘the personal abode of the Supreme Lord’. That the Supreme Personality of Godhead resides in His own spiritual realm is again confirmed by the following statements of the Sruti-sastra: “The spiritual world is the personal abode of the Supreme Personality of Godhead.” Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad 4.3.32 3 The spiritual realm of the Personality of Godhead is also described in the Pippalada-sakha: “The subtle, transcendental, eternal abode of Lord Visnu is the best of all planets, and although everyone should know about it, it is generally not properly understood. Only the greatest yogi-philosophers understand the true nature of this abode of Lord Visnu. 4 The spiritual realm of Vaikuntha is also described in the Maha Narayana Upanisad (8.14): “They who have renounced the material world enter the spiritual sky, which the Supreme Personality of Godhead has hidden from the gaze of the conditioned souls.” 5 The transcendental abode of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is also described in the Nrsimha-tapani Upanisad (5.10): “In the transcendental abode of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the original author of the Vedic mantras, there is no suffering of any kind. In that abode neither the sun, moon or stars shine, the wind does not blow, death cannot enter, and there are no defects of any kind. That abode is blissful, eternal, peaceful and always full of all auspiciousness. The yogis meditate on that supreme abode, and the demigods headed by Brahma offer obeisances and prayers to that supreme abode. The yogis who travel to that supreme abode of the Lord never return to this material world.” 6 The spiritual abode of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is also described in the following mantra of the Rg Veda: “The saintly demigods continually gaze at Lord Visnu’s transcendental abode, which is like a brilliant sun in the spiritual sky. The residents of that abode of the Lord are free from any defect, effulgent and always awake with all spiritual knowledge." 7 These Vedic passages describe the spiritual realm as the object of Lord Brahma's prayers, and they also say that once having entered that spiritual realm on never returns to the material world. This is a clear description of the planet of Lord Visnu. These descriptions do not apply to the impersonal Brahman effulgence, and therefore no one should interpret that these statements describe that impersonal Brahman. The Rg Veda's description of the planet of Lord Visnu is also corroborated by the following explanation of Visnu Purana (2.8.93-98): 8 "Above the planets of the seven sages, the Dhruvaloka planet is situated. Dhruvaloka is the splendid, transcendental abode of Lord Visnu. It is situated in the spiritual sky, above both the upper and lower material planets. 9 "O brahmana, they who have renounced this material world, who control the mind and senses, and have become free from all material impurities and all past sinful and pious karmic reactions, reside in that transcendental abode. 10 "In that place there are no pious or impious karmic reactions, and nothing causes pain. Having gone to that place one never laments. That is Lord Visnu's supreme abode. 11 "Yamaraja, Dhruva Maharaja, and other demigod administrators of universal affairs, whose opulence is equal to that of the Lord Himself, reside in that spiritual realm. This is Lord Visnu's supreme abode. 12 "Whatever has been and whatever will be in the future, the entire material creation as well as all moving and non moving living entities are manifested from this spiritual world, just as the warp and woof of a loom creates a cloth. O Maitreya, this spiritual realm is the supreme abode of Lord Visnu. 13 "Thus unlimitedly expanded spiritual realm is like a great eye in the spiritual sky. It gives transcendental knowledge to the devotees. This is Lord Visnu's supreme abode." 14 The previously quoted statement of the Nrsimha-tapani Upanisad that "In the spiritual world the wind does not blow, the sun, moon and stars do not shine" means that there are no material wind, sun, moon or stars in the spiritual world. Spiritual sun, moon, stars and winds do, however, exist in the spiritual world, and this fact is supported by many statements of Smrti-sastra. 15 (The story of Maharaja Dhruva narrated in the Srimad Bhagavatam contains a very clear description of the Vaikuntha realm of Lord Visnu. We shall quote some of these verses to gain some understanding of that Vaikunthaloka. The first quotation explains why it was that Maharaja Dhruva, even though he had just directly seen the Supreme Personality of Godhead, nevertheless remained morose at heart.) Srimad Bhagavatam (4.2.29) explains: "Maitreya Muni answered: Dhruva Maharaja's heart, which was pierced by the arrows of the harsh words of his stepmother, was greatly aggrieved and thus when he fixed upon his goal of life he did not forget her misbehaviour. He did not demand actual liberation from this material world, but at the end of his devotional service, when the Supreme Personality of Godhead appeared before him, he was simply ashamed of the material demands he had in his mind."* 16 Maharaja Dhruva laments in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam

4.9.31): “Alas, just look at me! I am so unfortunate. I approached the lotus feet of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who can immediately cut the chain of the repetition of birth and death, but still, out of my foolishness, I prayed for things which are perishable.”* 17 This verse records Dhruva Maharaja’s dissatisfaction. He prayed for a very exalted position, and he received a benediction far excelling this original desire. 18 The exalted position attained by Maharaja Dhruva is described by Mahatma Vidura in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.9.28): “Sri Vidura inquired: My dear brahmana, the abode of the Lord is very difficult to attain. It can be attained only by pure devotional service, which alone pleases the most affectionate, merciful Lord. Dhruva Maharaja achieved this position even in one life, and he was very wise and conscientious. Why, then, was he not very pleased?”* 19 The exalted position attained by Maharaja Dhruva is described by the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.9.25): “The Personality of Godhead continued: My dear Dhruva, after your material life in this body, you will go to My planet, which is always offered obeisances by the residents of all other planetary systems. It is situated above the planets of the seven rsis, and having gone there you will never have to come back again to this material world.”* 20 This great benediction, Dhruva’s liberation in the planet of Lord Visnu, is described by two associates of the Lord in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.12.26): “Dear King Dhruva, neither your forefathers nor anyone else before you ever achieved such a transcendental planet. The planet known as Visnuloka, where Lord Visnu personally resides, is the highest of all. It is worshipable by the inhabitants of all other planets within the universe. Please come with us and live there eternally.”* 21 Maharaja Dhruva’s good fortune is also described by Srila Suta Gosvami in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.13.1): “Suta Gosvami, continuing to speak to all the rsis, headed by Saunaka, said: After hearing Maitreya Rsi describe Dhruva Maharaja’s ascent to Lord Visnu’s abode, Vidura became very much enlightened in devotional emotion, and he inquired from Maitreya as follows: 22 The the planet ruled by Dhruva Maharaja is an eternal Vaikuntha planet is confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (5.22.17): “Situated 8 800 000 miles above Saturn, or 20 800 000 miles above earth, are the seven saintly sages, who are always thinking of the well-being of the inhabitants of the universe. They circumambulate the supreme abode of Lord Visnu, known as Dhruvaloka, the polestar.”* 23 This is also confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (5.23.1): “Sukadeva Gosvami continued: My dear King 1 300 000 yojanas (10 400 000 miles) above the planets of the seven sages is the place that learned scholars describe as the abode of Lord Visnu. The son of Maharaja Uttanapada, the great devotee Maharaja Dhruva, still resides as the life source of all the living entities who live until the end of creation. Agni, Indra, Prajapati, Kasyapa and Dharma all assemble there to offer him honour and respectful obeisances. They circumambulate him with their right sides toward him. I have already described the glorious activities of Maharaja Dhruva (in the Fourth Canto of Srimad Bhagavatam).”* 24 These quotations from Srimad Bhagavatam show that the Dhruvaloka planet is an eternal Vaikuntha planet, even though it is apparently situated within the jurisdiction of the material world. The situation of a liberated soul who lives within the material world is similar, as described in the Vedanta-sutra (4.4.19): “Although situated within a material body, which goes through the six material transformations, a liberated soul is actually situated on the transcendental platform. He has nothing to do with the changing material world.” 25 At the time of annihilation of the material universe, when all the material planets perish, the Dhruvaloka planet is not destroyed, but merely becomes no longer visible tot he eyes of the conditioned souls. That Dhruvaloka is not destroyed at the time of cosmic annihilation is confirmed by Hiranyakasipu in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 7.3.11): “By dint of my severe austerities, I shall reverse the results of pious and impious activities. I shall overturn all the established practices within this world. Even Dhruvaloka will be vanquished at the end of the millennium. Therefore, what is the use of it? I shall prefer to remain in the position of Brahma.”* 26 In this way it may be understood that Dhruvaloka is an eternal Vaikuntha planet, even though it is manifested within the boundaries of the material world. This nature of Dhruvaloka is described in many different passages of the Sruti-sastra, and it is also described by Lord Siva in the following words (Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda 91.54.77): 27 “O Parvati, please listen to this description of the opulences of the material world and the opulences of the spiritual world, which is three fourths of the entire creation. 28 “The auspicious Viraja river flows between the material and spiritual worlds. This river is produced from the perspiration of the Personified Vedas. 29 “On the far shore of that Viraja river is the eternal, deathless, imperishable, unlimited, nectarean spiritual sky, which consists of three fourths of the entire creation. 30 “That imperishable spiritual realm is the abode of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. That realm is made of the transcendental mode of pure goodness, and it is more splendid than many millions of blazing suns. 31 “This spiritual world is full of all knowledge and free from all forms of destruction. It is limitless, eternal, effulgent, free from old age, and free from the various forms of material consciousness, including the states of material wakefulness and material sleep. 32 “This spiritual world is the abode of liberation, and it is full of all spiritual bliss. Nothing is equal or superior to it, and it is without beginning or end. It is supremely auspicious, and it glows with a golden effulgence. 33 “This spiritual world is wonderfully splendid, delightful and eternal, It is like a great ocean of transcendental bliss, and it is full of all transcendental attributes. This place is the supreme transcendental abode of Lord Visnu. 34 “That abode of Lord Hari is not illumined by the sun or moon, nor by electricity. One who reaches it never returns to this material world.* 35 “This transcendental abode of Lord Visnu is perfect, eternal, and imperishable. No one can properly describe it, even if he had hundreds of millions of kalpas in which to speak. 36 “Neither brahma, the great sages, nor I have the power to describe the abode of Lord Hari. If one thinks he completely understands the abode where the infallible Supreme Personality of Godhead resides, then that person does not know the first thing about the Lord’s abode. 37 “This abode of the Lord is very confidential and cannot be understood merely by studying the Vedas. Even the demigods who control the universe cannot properly understand it. If one does not understand this abode of the Lord, then what is the use of his chanting the Vedic hymns? If one does understand the abode of the Lord, then all the Vedic hymns become automatically manifest to him. 38 “The demigods continually fix their gaze upon Lord Visnu’s infallible, imperishable, eternal, transcendental abode, which is like a brilliant sun shining in the spiritual sky. 39 “Although neither Brahma, Siva or any of the other demigods can enter this transcendental abode, the best of the yogis can at least see it by means of transcendental knowledge obtained from the Vedic literatures. 40 “Neither Brahma, the demigods, the great sages, nor I myself can completely understand this transcendental abode of the Lord. However, what little I have been able to understand by studying all the Upanisads, O saintly Parvati, I shall now relate to You. 41 “In the centre of Lord Visnu’s transcendental abode is a nectarean fountain named Subha. At this place are many long horned surabhi cows with their calves. 42 “In that splendid abode of Lord Visnu, who carries the Sarnga bow, and who is glorified by the devotees, are many glorious and auspicious surabhi cows. 43 “That eternal, pure realm of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is splendid as the sun. It is supremely effulgent and it exists beyond the darkness of the material world. 44 This eternal transcendental abode is always awake with spiritual awareness. In the topmost part of this spiritual abode eternal Lord Visnu and His consort Srimati Laksmi-devi reside. 45 Near Sri Sri Laksmi-Visnu, the two youthful sisters Bhu-sakti an Lila-sakti, who are very dear to the Lord, stay. Before them are the eternal Sadhyas and Visvedevas. 46 “Learned brahmanas awake with spiritual knowledge, even seeing whom brings all auspiciousness, glorify that splendid transcendental abode. 47 “The supreme abode of Lord Visnu is known by the name Moksa (liberation). They who become free from the bonds of repeated birth and death attain transcendental bliss in that supreme abode. 48 “Lord Visnu’s supreme abode is known as Moksa (liberation), because they who enter it never return to repeated birth and death in the material world. That supreme abode is also known by the names Param padam (Supreme Abode), Lingam (the form of the Lord), Amrta (The Immortal Nectar) and Visnu-mandira (the temple of Lord Visnu). 49 “Lord Visnu’s supreme abode is also known as Aksara (The Imperishable Abode), Paramam dhama (the Supreme Abode), Vaikuntha (the place where there is no anxiety), Sasvatam padam (The Eternal Abode), Nitya (The Eternal Abode), Parama-vyoma (the Spiritual sky), Sarvotkrsta (The Supreme Abode), and Sanatana (The Eternal Abode). 50 “The Supreme abode of the infallible Personality of Godhead has many other names also. I shall

now describe in detail the nature of this supreme abode, which is three fourths of the entire potency of the Lord." 51 Although many passages of Sruti and Smrti-sastra describe the Lord's abode, they will not all be quoted here. The next quote will be from a conversation of Brahma and Narada recorded in the Jitanta-stotra of the Narada-pancaratra: 52 "The six planetary system named Vaikunthaloka is full of six transcendental opulences. They who are not devotees of Lord Visnu are not able to enter that transcendental realm, which remains always untouched by the three modes of material nature. 53 "The Vaikuntha realm is full of eternally perfect liberated devotees of the Lord. That realm is very auspicious and beautiful, endowed with many assembly buildings, palaces, forests and gardens. 54 "The Vaikuntha realm is beautifully decorated with many trees, wells, lakes, and ponds. That non material realm is worshipped and glorified by the demigods. It is splendid as millions of suns. 55 The realm of Vaikuntha is further described in the following statement of Brahmanda Purana: "The Vaikuntha realm is full of unlimited spiritual attributes.. It is full of supreme effulgence and it is very difficult to attain. It is incomparable and full of transcendental bliss. It remains invisible to the material senses of the conditioned souls." 56 The Vaikuntha realm is also described in the following verses from the story of Mudgala related in the Itihasa-samuccaya: "Above the planet of Brahma lies the eternal, effulgent, pure abode of Lord Visnu. Great sages know that abode as the Supreme Brahman." 57 "Saintly devotees who devotedly engage in meditation and yoga, who have controlled the senses, and who are free from false-ego, material possessiveness, and material duality, attain that supreme abode. 58-59 "The who worship, remember and meditate on the infallible transcendental Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is known as Hari, Visnu, Krsna, Jisnu, Sanatana, Narayana, Aja, Deva, Visvaksena, and Caturbhuja, attain the Supreme Lord's abode. This is the conclusion of the eternal Vedic literatures." 60 Vaikunthaloka is described in the Skanda Purana in a conversation between Sanat-kumara and Markandeya Rsi in these words: "O best of the brahmanas, one who is a devotee of Lord Visnu, and who decorates his body with the marks of the conchshell, disc, and other signs of the Lord, goes to Lord Visnu's planet, which is not destroyed when the entire universe is consumed by flames." 61 Someone may argue that the words 'para-dhama' and 'sthana' used in these quotations may be interpreted to mean the transcendental form of the Lord and the Lord's abode. If we examine these verses in context we shall see this argument to be patently false. For example, when the Lord says: "The devotees attain My abode (sthana), which the sages know as the Supreme Brahman," the 'sthana' must be taken to mean the Lord's abode. Any other interpretation will be rejected by the intelligent reader. 62 If one were to argue that the word 'ca' (and) although not directly expressed in the statement param brahmeti yad viduh' (The great sages know that abode as the Supreme Brahman) from the Itihasa-samuccaya, should be understood, and therefore the words 'param brahma' should not be taken as adjectives modifying the Lord's abode, but as nouns referring the Supreme Godhead, then to this argument I reply that the word 'loka' (planet) is used in many places where it is clearly modified by the word 'param brahma', and that therefore in this instance it should also be understood in the same way. The words 'pada', 'dhama', 'sthana' and 'loka' all refer to the same thing; the abode of the Lord. When they are jointly used, as they are in the passages just quoted, they cast far away any other possible explanation of what they actually mean. As the words 'bhagavan', 'hari' and visnu' refer only to the form of the Lord, and not to anything else in the same way these statements of the Padma Purana, Visnu Purana, and other Vedic literatures should be taken to describe only the abode of the Lord. They cannot be understood to describe the Lord's form. These passages of Vedic literature can be considered to appropriately describe only the Lord's abode for they say the object of their description is not attained by fruitive or non devotional work. In many other ways also the description presented in these passages can be considered to appropriately describe only the Lord's abode. On the other hand, the Lord's form is appropriately described in a particular way (for example; as holding a rod in His hand, etc.), radically different from the descriptions in these passages. An example of an appropriate description of the Lord's form may be found in Srimad Bhagavatam 6.9.32 quoted in Anuccheda 72. In this way, therefore, we may conclude that the passages quoted clearly describe the transcendental abode of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. They cannot be taken to describe His form.

1 In this the Vaikuntha world is described. As the Supreme Personality of Godhead appears in many different forms, sometimes manifesting His opulences in full, and sometimes only manifesting part of His opulence, in the same way for each form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead there is a corresponding Vaikuntha planet. This is described in the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda, and also in the following statement of Maitreya Rsi (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.19.31): After thus killing the most formidable demon Hiranyaksa, the Supreme Lord Hari, the origin of the boar species, returned to His own abode, where there is always an uninterrupted festival. The Lord was praised by all the demigods, headed by Brahma."* The word 'sadayitva' in this verse means 'after killing.' 2 That each form of the Lord has His own Vaikuntha planet is also confirmed in the Bodhayana-sastra, in the discussion of the Pavitraropa festival: "One who worships Lord Nrsimhadeva by faithfully performing the Pavitraropa festival every year will become liberated. He will enter the transcendental planet where Lord Nrsimhadeva resides." 3 The planet of Lord Siva is described in the same way in the Vayu Purana: "At the time of cosmic dissolution all the universes will be completely flooded by a great ocean. 4 "Waters of devastation will violently flood all the universes up, down, and in all directions. 5 "Great fires will then reduce all the planets into iron spheres, and then great hurricane winds will tear through all the universes. 6 "The unlimited unmanifested avyakta will first absorb the hurricane winds, and then it will absorb, one after another, the ether element, the five gross elements, and the mahat-tattva. 7 "The avyakta is an unlimited, unmanifested darkness. It is beginningless, endless, invisible, without any boundary, and free from any designation. 8 "Beyond this darkness, beyond the ether element, and beyond the boundary of the material universes is the Lord Siva's great transcendental abode, which even the great demigods cannot approach. This is clearly described in the Sruti-sastra."

1 As the Supreme Personality of Godhead sometimes manifests His transcendental form within the material world, so He sometimes manifests some of His transcendental abodes within the boundaries of the material realm. One instance of this is described by Srila Sukadeva Gosvami in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 8.5.4-5): “From the combination of Subhra and his wife, Vaikuntha, there appeared the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Vaikuntha, along with demigods who were His personal plenary expansions.* 2 “Just to please the goddess of fortune, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Vaikuntha, at her request, created another Vaikuntha planet, which is worshipped by everyone.”* 3 As the transcendental form of the Personality of Godhead is eternal and only enters the material world, although it is said to be ‘born’, so the Lord’s eternal spiritual realm only enters the material world, although in this verse the word ‘born’ (jajne) is used. In these verses the word ‘vaikuntha’ means ‘the son of Vaikuntha-devi’ as well as ‘the spiritual planets Brahma saw before the creation of the material universe (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.9-16). 4 That Vaikunthaloka is situated beyond the boundaries of the material universes filled with Svarga and other planets is confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (8.19.11): “Upon seeing that the residence of Lord Visnu was vacant, Hiranyakasipu began searching for Lord Visnu everywhere. Angry at not seeing Him, Hiranyakasipu screamed loudly and searched the entire universe, including the surface of the earth, the higher planetary systems, all directions and all the caves and oceans. But Hiranyakasipu, the greatest hero, did not see Visnu anywhere.”*

Anuccheda 75

The devotees who serve Lord Vaikuntha as His direct associates are on the same transcendental platform as the Lord Himself, for without being equally transcendental they could not directly serve Him. This is confirmed by Vedic literature in these words: "One who is not like the Supreme Lord cannot worship or serve Him." That the eternal associates of the Lord do not have material bodies, senses, and life-airs, as the conditioned souls born in the cycle of samsara do, but instead have spiritual forms made of pure transcendental goodness, is confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (7.1.35): "The bodies of the inhabitants of Vaikuntha are completely spiritual, having nothing to do with the material body, senses or life air."*

Anuccheda 76

That the personal associates of the Lord are like their master is confirmed by the following statement of Srila Sukadeva Gosvami (Srimad Bhagavatam 6.9.28): “Surrounding and serving the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Narayana, were sixteen personal attendants, decorated with ornaments and appearing exactly like Him but without the mark of Srivatsa and the Kaustubha jewel. O King, when all the demigods saw the Supreme Lord in that posture, smiling with eyes like the petals of lotuses grown in autumn, they were overwhelmed with happiness and immediately fell down like rods, offering dandavats. Then they slowly rose and pleased the Lord by offering Him prayers.”*

Anuccheda 77

The great devotees of the Lord obtain transcendental benefits that cannot be destroyed by time. This is described by Prahlada Maharaja in a prayer to Lord Nrsimhadeva (Srimad Bhagavatam 7.9.24): “My dear Lord, now I have complete experience concerning the worldly opulence, mystic power, longevity and other material pleasures enjoyed by all living entities, from Lord Brahma down to the ant. As powerful time, You destroy them all. Therefore, because of my experience, I do not wish to possess them. My dear Lord, I request You to place me in touch with Your pure devotee and let me serve him as a sincere servant.”*

1 The Vaikuntha planets and the liberated devotees who reside there are described in Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda: “Countless bliss spiritual planets are in the spiritual sky, which is three fourths of the entire creation. 2 “All these spiritual planets are eternal, changeless, and free from the abominable material mode of passion. They are pure, and they have a golden effulgence bright as millions of suns. 3 “All these transcendental planets are all filled with Vedic knowledge and free from lust, anger, and other vices. On these planets reside great devotees whose only joy is the pure devotional service of Lord Narayana’s lotus feet.” 4 In these verses the word ‘tri-pad-vibhuti’ indicates the spiritual world beyond the material universes, and the word ‘pada-vibhuti’ indicates the material

universes. 5 This is described in the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda: “The eternal spiritual world is three fourths of existence, whereas the temporary material world is only one fourth of existence. 6 “The Supreme Personality of godhead, whose form is eternal, auspicious, transcendental, infallible, delightful, and always youthful, resides in that supreme abode accompanied by His potencies Isvari-devi, Sri-devi and Bhumi-devi. 7 The Vaikuntha planets and material world are both described in Srimad Bhagavatam (2.6.18): “The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the controller of immortality and fearlessness, and He is transcendental to death and the fruitive actions of the material world. O Narada, O brahmana, it is therefore difficult to measure the glories of the Supreme Person.”* 8 This verse from Srimad Bhagavatam directly mentions the Lord’s immortality and fearlessness, and the Lord’s position of being always liberated from material influence is implied although not directly and the other two qualities only implied in the following statement of the Sruti-sastra (Svetasvatara Upanisad 3.15): “The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the original master of all immortality.” The passage of Srimad Bhagavatam describes the Lord, the possessor of these qualities, (immortality, fearlessness, and liberation) whereas the passage from Sruti-sastra describes the qualities the Lord possesses. 9 Vaikunthaloka’s immortality is hinted in these words of Srimad Bhagavatam (2.9.9.): “Vaikuntha is adored by all self-realised persons freed from all kinds of miseries and fear of illusory existence.”* Vaikunthaloka’s blissfulness is hinted in these words of Srimad Bhagavatam (2.9.9): “Vaikuntha is the supreme planet above all others.”* 10 That the Vaikunthaloka is eternal is also described in the following statement of Padma Purana (Uttara-khanda 255.77): “The residence of Lord Visnu is eternal.” 11 That the Vaikuntha planets are completely free from all fear is hinted by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (2.9.10): “In the personal abode of the Lord there is no predominance of the influence of time.”* 12 This is also confirmed by the following statement of Srimad Bhagavatam (12.11.19): “O brahmanas, the transcendental abode of the Lord is always free from all fear.” 13 That the abode of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is auspicious is hinted by Srimad Bhagavatam (2.9.10): “The illusory external energy (maya) cannot enter the personal abode of the Lord.”* Because it is completely free from the material modes, which turn one from the Lord, Vaikunthaloka should be understood to be a great reservoir of the auspiciousness of pure devotional service to the Supreme Lord. 14 That devotional service is the abode of all auspiciousness is confirmed by the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself in the following words (Naradiya Purana): “O best of the brahmanas, I grant to you unwavering pure devotional service unto Me. This devotional service is full of perfect transcendental bliss, and it is the reservoir of all auspiciousness.” 15 That the abode of the Lord is always liberated from material contact is confirmed by the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.20.37): “My pure devotees attain liberation from matter by entering My transcendental abode.” 16

Taking shelter of secondary meanings of the words ‘amrta’ and ‘bhaya’ one may interpret them to mean ‘Janaloka and the other material planetary systems.’ This laboured misinterpretation is refuted by the use of the word ‘martyam’ (dying), which clearly indicates that these two words should be interpreted according to their primary meanings. This word (martyam) is explained by the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.10.30): “Even Brahma who possesses the supreme life-span of 311 040 000 000 000 years, is also afraid of Me.” 17 In this verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.6.18), the word ‘annam’ means ‘the results of fruitive actions’, and the word ‘atyagat’ means ‘Transcending the three material planetary systems, the Lord is present in the spiritual world.’ 18 The word ‘esah’ means ‘The Supreme Lord whose form is full of immortality and all other opulences’, and the word ‘duratyayah’ means ‘He whom the brahmacaris and other transcendentalists cannot understand or measure by the speculative powers of the mind.” 19 In this way we have describe the eternal spiritual world, which is three quarters of all existence, and the material world, which is subject of destruction, and which is one quarter of all existence. 20 Lord Brahma again describes the opulence of the spiritual world, which is three quarters of all existence (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.6.19): “The Supreme Personality of Godhead is to be known as the supreme reservoir of all material opulences by the one fourth of His energy in which all the living entities exist. Deathlessness, fearlessness and freedom from the anxieties of old age and disease exist in the kingdom of God, which is beyond the three higher planetary systems and beyond the material coverings.”* 21 In this verse Brahma says: “The living entities, as well as death and other material qualities, exist within the material world which is one quarter of all existence (sthiti-padah). All the opulences of the Lord are distributed throughout the four quarters (padesu) of existence, including both spiritual and material worlds. The living entities (sarva-bhutani) including the personal associates of the Lord reside in all four quarters of creation (including both spiritual and material worlds).” 22 In this verse Lord Brahma describes the spiritual world which is three quarters of the creation. He says: “Deathlessness (amrtam), fearlessness (abhayam), and freedom from the anxiety of old-age and disease (ksemam) eternally exist (adhayi) in the kingdom of God, which is beyond (murdhasu) the three higher planetary systems, the material coverings and the three modes of material nature.” The material world is the creation’s single-quarter part where death and various fruitive actions exist and above that is the three-quarters part, or the spiritual world, where there are deathlessness and other auspicious conditions. The spiritual and material worlds are described by the Rg Veda (10.90.3): “Three quarters of existence is the eternal and perfectly opulent spiritual world.” The word ‘divi’, which means ‘Vaikuntha’, is the realm where all opulences, eternality, and other auspicious conditions exist. The auspiciousness described here refers to both Vaikuntha and its residents. 23 Brahma describes the other part of the four quarters of existence, the realm of the three material planetary systems, in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.6.20): “The spiritual world, which consists of three fourths of the Lord’s energy, is situated beyond this material world, and it is especially meant for those who will never be reborn. Others, who are attached to family life and who do not strictly follow celibacy vows, must live within the three material worlds.”* 24 The word ‘ca’ (and) here means ‘and for all those’. In this verse Brahma says: ‘The spiritual world, which consists of three fourths (padas trayah) of the Lord’s energy, is situated beyond (bahih) the material world (tri-lokyah).” This is also explained in the Purusa-sukta (Rg Veda): “The spiritual world is three fourths of the Lord’s energy.” One may ask “Who resides in that spiritual world?” Brahma answers by saying: “The spiritual world is meant to be the residence of those who will never be reborn (aprajanam asramah).” This means the sannyasis, vanaprasthas and brahmacaris, or in other words, those who follow the vow of celibacy. Brahma describes the residents of the material world in these words: “Others (aparah), who are attached to family life (grha-medhah) and who do not strictly follow celibacy vows (abrhad-vratah), must live within (antah) the three material worlds (tri-lokyah).” 25 The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the master of both spiritual and material worlds, as Brahma explains to Narada (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.6.21): “By His energies, the all-pervading Personality of Godhead is thus comprehensively the master in the activities of controlling and in devotional service. He is the ultimate maters of both nescience and factual knowledge of all situations.”* 62 In this verse Brahma says: “The all-pervading (visvak) Personality of Godhead (purusah) is thus comprehensively the master (vicakrame) of the two destinations (srti) attained by the living entities.” One may ask: “What are these two destinations?’ Brahma answers this question by saying: “These two destinations are the enjoyment of the fruits of karma (sasana) and transcending those fruits (anasane). Then he describes the method of overcoming the fruits of karma. The word ‘avidya’ here means ‘the illusory potency maya’ and ‘vidya’ means ‘the spiritual potency’. The Lord is then described as the shelter (asrayah) of both potencies. It is said (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.6.22): “From that Personality of Godhead, all the universal globes and the universal form with all material elements, qualities and senses are generated. Yet He is aloof from such material manifestations, like the sun, which is separated from its rays and heat.”* In this way creation may be divided into fourths, (three-fourths) possessing all opulence, and (one fourth), possessing partial opulence. (The verse quoted from Srimad Bhagavatam was spoken by) Brahma to Narada.

1 The form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is the master of the internal spiritual potencies, is manifest by the Lord's own potency. By a specific potency the wonderful variety of the Lord's many forms is manifested. Our evidence (for the description of the Lord's form) is given by the Four Kumaras in the next fourteen verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.37-50): 2 "At that very moment, the Lord, who is called Padmanabha because of the lotus grown from His navel and who is the delight of the righteous, learned about the insult offered by His own servants to the saints. Accompanied by His spouse, the goddess of fortune, He went to the spot on those very feet sought for by recluses and great sages.* 3 "The sages, headed by Sanaka Rsi, saw that the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Visnu, who was formerly visible only within their hearts in ecstatic trance, had now actually become visible to their eyes. As He came forward, accompanied by His own associates bearing all paraphernalia, such as an umbrella and a camara fan, the white bunches of hair moved very gently, like two swans, and due to their favourable breeze the pearls garlanding the umbrella also moved, like drops of nectar falling from the white full moon of ice melting due to a gust of wind.* 4 “The Lord is the reservoir of all pleasure. His auspicious presence is meant for everyone’s benediction, and His affectionate smiling and glancing touch the core of the heart. The Lord’s beautiful bodily colour is blackish, and His broad chest is the resting place of the goddess of fortune, who glorifies the entire spiritual world, the summit of all heavenly planets. Thus it appeared that the Lord was personally spreading the beauty and good fortune of the spiritual world.* 5 “He was adorned with a girdle that shone brightly on the yellow cloth covering His large hips, and He wore a garland of fresh flowers which was distinguished by humming bees. His lovely wrist were graced with bracelets, and He rested one of His hands on the shoulder of Garuda, His carrier, and twirled a lotus with another hand.* 6 “His countenance was distinguished by cheeks that enhanced the beauty of His alligator-shaped pendants, which outshone lightning. His nose was prominent, and His head was covered with a gem-studded crown. A charming necklace hung between His stout arms, and His neck was adorned with the gem known by the name Kaustubha.* 7 “The exquisite beauty of Narayana, being many times magnified by the intelligence of His devotees, was so attractive that it defeated the pride of the goddess of fortune in being the most beautiful. My dear demigods, the Lord who thus manifested Himself is worshipable by me, by Lord Siva and by all of you. The sages regarded Him with unsated eyes and joyously bowed their heads at His lotus feet.* 8 “When the breeze carrying the aroma of tulasi leaves from the toes of the lotus feet of the Personality of Godhead entered the nostrils of those sages, they experienced a change both in body and in mind, even though they were attached to the impersonal Brahman understanding.* 9 “The Lord’s beautiful face appeared to them like the inside of a blue lotus, and the Lord’s smile appeared to be a blossoming jasmine flower. After seeing the face of the Lord, the sages were fully satisfied, and when they wanted to see Him further, they looked upon the nails of His lotus feet, which resembled rubies. Thus they viewed the Lord’s transcendental body again and again, and so they finally achieved meditation on the Lord’s personal feature.* 10 “This is the form of the Lord which is meditated upon by the followers of the yoga process, and it is pleasing to the yogis in meditation. It is not imaginary but factual, as proved by great yogis. The Lord is full in eight kinds of achievement, but for others these achievements are not possible in full perfection.* 11 “The Kumaras said: Our dear Lord, You are not manifested to rascals, even though You are seated within the heart of everyone. But as far as we are concerned, we see You face to face, although You are unlimited. The statements we have heard about You from our father, Brahma, through the ears have now been actually realised by Your kind appearance.* 12 “We known that You are the Supreme Absolute Truth, the Personality of Godhead, who manifests His transcendental form in the uncontaminated mode of pure goodness. This transcendental, eternal form of Your personality can be understood only by Your mercy, through unflinching devotional service, by great sages whose hearts have been purified in the devotional way.* 13 “Persons who are very expert and most intelligent in understand things as they are engage in hearing narrations of the auspicious activities and pastimes of the Lord, which are worth chanting and worth hearing. Such persons do not care even for the highest material benediction, namely liberation, to say nothing of less important benedictions like the material happiness of the heavenly kingdom.* 14 “O Lord, we pray that You let us be born in any hellish condition of life, just a long as our hearts and minds are always engaged in the service of Your lotus feet, our words are made beautiful (by speaking of Your activities) just as tulasi leaves are beautified when offered unto Your feet, and long as our ears are always filled with the chanting of Your transcendental qualities.* 15 “O Lord, we therefore offer our respectful obeisances unto Your eternal form as the Personality of Godhead, which You have so kindly manifested before us. Your supreme, eternal form cannot be seen by unfortunate, less intelligent persons, but we are so much satisfied in our minds and vision to see it.”* 16 Now these verses will be discussed. Sridhara Svami explains the first of these verses (Text 2): “This verse should be understood to mean: “The Supreme Lord, who is the delight of the righteous (arya-hrdyah), learned (vibudhya) about the insult (atikramam) offered by His own servants (svanam) who had checked the movements of the Four Kumaras, headed by Sanaka Kumara. Accompanied by the goddess of fortune, He went (yayau) to the spot (tasmin), quickly walking there (calayan) with His own feet (caranau).” “The Supreme Lord thought: ‘I will show My anger to these two gatekeepers because they have offended the sages who came to see My lotus feet. Laksmi-devi and I will both pacify the desireless sages by granting them many opulences.’” 17 In order to grant spiritual bliss to the Four Kumaras, whose pleasure was self-realisation, the Lord granted them the sight of His lotus feet. The Lord, whose superexcellent transcendental form is the abode of all eternity, knowledge and bliss, along with His pastimes-potency, the goddess of fortune, personally went to those sages. The word ‘svanam’ is used in the plural (and not the dual) in this verse, although it refers only to the two gatekeepers. It may be that the Lord took it that all His personal associates were responsible for the offense of these two, or it may be that the plural is used out of respect for the exalted gatekeepers. It should not be understood that the word ‘svanam’ is used here to refer to the four (Kumaras) sages. These sages were not intimate devotees of the Lord, as the gatekeepers of Vaikuntha were, and therefore the word “svanam” (His own servants) cannot appropriately refer to them. 18 The next five verses (Texts 3-7), describe the Supreme Personality of Godhead as He was seen by the Four Kumaras. They say: “The sages (te) headed by Sanaka Rsi saw the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Visnu, who was formerly visible only within their hearts in ecstatic trance (sva-samadhi-bhagyam), had now actually become visible to their eyes (aksa-visayam).” This passage may also be interpreted to mean: “As a result of their previous meditation on the Lord in ecstatic trance (sva-samadhi), the four Kumaras (te) now obtained the opportunity to directly see the Supreme Lord with their own eyes. The Lord's own transcendental potency, which reveals the Lord's form to the intelligence and senses of His devotees, revealed the Lord's form to the four Kumaras. As the Kumaras had previously perceived the Lord in ecstatic meditation, in the same way they were now able to directly perceive the Lord, the sound of whose voice, and the touch, sight, taste and aroma of whose body are all full of complete eternity, knowledge and bliss. The Kumaras saw the Personality of Godhead as He is eternally manifested. As a result of their meditation on Him, the Kumaras were able to see the Personality of Godhead, who in various circumstances at various times is served with various articles of worship by His own personal associates filled with the intense bliss of pure love rising from directly seeing the great wonder of the charming sweetness of the Lord's form. In this way the Supreme Lord's potency of transcendental bliss reveals the role in the Lord's pastimes of the residents of Vaikuntha, who have attained the most desirable condition of life. The Lord's handsomeness which arouses great attraction and love in the hearts and minds of the Lord's associates is described in the three and a half verses (Texts 4-7) beginning with the word 'hamsa'. We may also note that the word 'kesara' used in this Text 3 means 'a necklace of pearls.' 19 The next verse (Text 4) says: "The Lord's affectionate and playful glancing (snehavaloka) and smiling (sumukham) granted benediction (prasada) to everyone (krtsna), including the two doorkeepers and the four Kumaras. The Lord is the abode (dhama) of all desirable (sprhaniya) qualities. The Lord's spiritual abode (atma-dhisnyam) of Vaikuntha, the abode of eternal, limitless, bliss, is the summit (cuda-manim) of all heavenly planets (svah). The Lord's broad chest (urasi) is the resting place of the goddess of fortune (sobhitaya sriya). The word 'subhagayantam iva' may also be interpreted to mean "The goddess of fortune rested on the Lord's chest as if she were a subhaga-ornament." The word 'iva' (like) is used to express the analogy in this statement. 20 The Vaikuntha realm is again described in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.26): "Thus the great sages, Sanaka, Sanatana, Sananda and Sanat-kumara, upon reaching the abovementioned Vaikuntha in the spiritual world by dint of their mystic yoga performance, perceived unprecedented happiness. They found that the spiritual sky was illuminated by highly decorated airplanes piloted by the best devotees of Vaikuntha and was predominated by the Supreme Personality of Godhead."* 21 The four Kumaras' departure from Vaikuntha is described in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.16.27-28): "After seeing the Lord of Vaikuntha, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, in the self-illuminated Vaikuntha planet, the sages left that transcendental abode.* 22 "The sages circumambulated the Supreme Lord, offered their obeisances and returned, extremely delighted at learning of the divine opulences of the Vaisnava."* 23 In the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.40 quoted in text 5) the words 'kancya' and 'vana-malaya' are in the instrumental case. In the verse after that (Srimad Bhagavatam

3.15.41, quoted in text 6) the word 'harata' means 'charming'. Having described the beauty of the Lord's garments and ornaments, Srimad Bhagavatam next describes the beauty of the Lord's form in the next verse (3.15.42, quoted in text 7). This verse says: "The exquisite beauty (bahu-sausthavadhyam) of Narayana was so attractive that it defeated (upasrstam) the pride (utsmitam) of the goddess of fortune (indirayah) in being the most beautiful. The Lord's great beauty was many times magnified by the intelligence (dhiya) of His devotees. The Lord was thus glorified by the devotees because His transcendental form was full of unlimited beauty, opulence, and charming qualities (bahu-sausthavadhyam)." 24 At this point someone may ask: "How is it possible that the confidential treasure o the Lord's transcendental beauty is so great that it exceeds the beauty of Laksmi-devi, the goddess of fortune. Is it not true that there is no beauty greater than Laksmi's? Brahma answered this question by describing the unequalled supremacy of the Lord's beauty. Brahma says: "The Supreme Lord who thus manifested His transcendental form is worshipable (angam bhajantam) by me (mahyam), by Lord Siva, and by all of you." 25 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead's beauty and opulences are unequalled in all circumstances is confirmed by Sripada Yamunacarya in the following words (Stotra-ratna 13): "O my Lord, everything within material nature is limited by time, space and thought. Your characteristics, however, being unequalled and unsurpassed are always transcendental to such limitations. You sometimes cover such characteristics by Your own energy, but nevertheless Your unalloyed devotees are always able to see You under all circumstances."* 26 That the Supreme Lord may be seen by pure devotional service is described in the Sruti-sastra: "Pure devotional service leads one to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Pure devotional service enables one to see the Supreme Personality of Godhead." In this verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.42, quoted in text 7) it is said: "The four Kumaras regarded (niriksya) the Supreme Personality of Godhead with unsated (na vitrpta) eyes (drsah) and joyously (muda) bowed (nemuh) their heads (kaih) at His lotus feet." 27 Sripada Sridhara Svami comments on the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.43, quoted in Text 8): "The bliss of devotional service to the Lord is greater even than the bliss of directly seeing the Lord. This is described in this verse, where Lord Brahma says: "When the breeze (vayuh) carrying the aroma (makaranda) of tulasi leaves (tulasi) from the toes of the lotus feet (padaravinda-kinjalka) of the Personality of Godhead (tasya) entered the nostrils (sva-vivarena) of those sages, they experienced a change (sanksobham) both in body (tanvoh) and mind (citta), even though they were attached to the impersonal Brahman understanding (aksara-jusam)." The change of body experienced by the four Kumaras was the ecstatic symptom of hairs on the body standing up, and the change of mind they experienced was intense happiness in the mind." 28 The phrase 'padaravinda-kinkajlka-misra-tulasi' in this verse may be interpreted to mean 'the aroma of the tulasi leaves and the aroma of the toes of the lotus feet of the Supreme Personality of Godhead', or again it may also be interpreted to mean 'the aroma of the Lord's feet, and the aroma of the lotus flowers and tulasi leaves from His garland.' The breeze carried these aromas, mixed with the aroma of the Lord's transcendental limbs. Carried by the breeze, these combined aromas agitated the minds and bodies of the four Kumaras. 29 In the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.44, quoted in text 9, Lord Brahma respectfully describes the reason the four Kumaras felt transcendental ecstasy. Brahma says: "The Lord's beautiful face (vadana) appeared to them (te vai) like the inside (kosam) of a slightly blossomed blue (asita) lotus (padma). After seeing (udviksya) the face of the Lord, the sages were fully satisfied (labdhasisah), and when they wanted to see Him further, they looked down the nails (nakha) of His lotus feet (anghri-dvanvam) which resembled rubies (aruna-mani-srayanam). Thus they viewed (aveksya) the Lord's transcendental body again and again (punah)." Because the four Kumaras were not able to see the beautiful features of all the Lord's transcendental limbs at the same time, they meditated on the Lord's form, and in that meditation they were able to see all the Lord's transcendental limbs simultaneously. The four Kumaras thought: "How will we be able to see all the beautiful features of the Lord simultaneously?" Longing to seethe Lord in this way they meditated on Him. This meditation on the Lord increased their ecstatic love for Him. By this meditation the four Kumaras attained ecstatic love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. 30 In the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.45 quoted in text 10) Lord Brahma says: "This human-like (pumsam) form (vapuh) displayed (darsayanam) by the Lord is respectfully meditated upon (matam) by Brahma and all the great demigods (bahu)." The form mentioned here is the guna-avatara Visnu, who is manifested from the purusa-avatara Garbhodakasayi Visnu. Lord Visnu is no different from His transcendental form, unlike Brahma and the other demigods who have external material forms different from their spiritual identities. Lord Brahma continues: "The Lord is full of His own beginningless, self-manifested, eternal (autpattikaih) opulences (siddhaih) such as the eight opulences (beginning with anima-siddhi) achieved by yoga-practice (asta-bhogaih). Because the Lord is full of these transcendental opulences, the four Kumaras glorified (samagrnan) Him with many prayers." 31 In the next verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.46-50 quoted in texts 11-15) the four Kumaras offer prayers to the Lord, expressing their heart-felt feelings of love for Him. The phrase 'aksara-jusam' (the four Kumaras had previously been attached to the impersonal Brahman understanding) is explained by the Kumaras in the following words: "O Lord, that You are eternally manifest as the impersonal Brahma is neither very wonderful nor very significant. Your actually important feature is Your personal form, which Your own transcendental potency is now enabling us to see. How fortunate we have become now to be able to see You face to face (naya-mulam). O Lord, You are not manifested (antarhitah) to the rascals (duratmanam), even though You are seated (gatah) within the heart (hrdi) of everyone. But as far as we are concerned (nah), we see You face to face (nayana-mulam raddhah), although You are unlimited (ananta).” That one may see the Supreme Lord face to face by engaging in His devotional service is also confirmed in Vedanta-sutra (3.2.24): “By engaging in devotional service one may become eligible to directly see the Supreme Personality of Godhead face to face, and one may be able to understand Him with the mind and perceive Him within the heart by the process of meditation.” This is also confirmed in Katha Upanisad (2.1.1): 32 “Generally speaking, no one can see the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is beyond the grasp of the material senses. However, one who is intelligent and saintly, and who aspires for liberation, can turn his eyes from matter and become able to see the Supreme Personality of Godhead residing within his heart as the Supersoul.” 33 Because the Kumaras had heard about the Supreme Personality of Godhead from their father, Lord Brahma, they became eligible to see the Lord face to face. This is confirmed by the Kumaras in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.46, quoted in text 11): “The first statements we have heard about You (anuvarnita-rahah) from our father Brahma (pitra) through the ears (karna-vivarena) have now been actually realised by Your kind appearance (guham gato nah…bhavad-udbhavena).”* 34 At this point Lord Narayana may object: “Is it not so that because your father taught you the Absolute Truth is invisible and very secret, and because I am now openly visible before your eyes, therefore I cannot be that Absolute Truth but must be something else.”? The four Kumaras reject the idea that Lord Narayana is different from the Absolute Truth. They say (in the next verse, text 12): “We know that You are the Supreme Absolute truth, the Personality of Godhead.” 35 The Kumaras says: “O Supreme Personality of godhead (bhagavan), we know (vidama) that You are the Supreme Absolute Truth (param atma-tattvam), whose form is spiritual.” Lord Narayana then may ask: ‘How do you know?’ The Kumaras then reply: “We know because You have now (samprati) manifested before us Your transcendental form in the uncontaminated mode of pure goodness (sattvena). Until this moment we did not understand You, but now that we can directly see You, we have concluded that You are the Supreme. You appear before the spiritual eyes of us who are pure in heart. You are not visible to ordinary material eyes.” The Kumaras continue: “You are not known by transcendental knowledge (if it is devoid of love for You). You have created (racayantam) our love (ratim) for You, for otherwise we would not be able to love You. To the self-realised sages who are free from pride and false-ego, but who have no love for You, You appear as the splendid Brahman effulgence. There is a specific spiritual path by which one attains love for You.” The Kumaras then describe that specific path. They say: “Your mercy is the spiritual practice by which Your spiritual form becomes manifest. By Your mercy (anutapa-viditaih) and by unflinching devotional service (drdha-bhakti-yogaih), one understands You. This spiritual practice is also genuine humbleness, by which one understands unflinching pure devotional service. Lord

Narayana may ask: “What are the people who understand Me like?” The Kumaras then answer: “They are without attachment and are free from material bondage (udgranthayah). They are not interested in material life (viragah).” In this way these four verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.47-50) describe pure devotion and love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. 36 Although previously the Kumaras thought themselves non different from the Supreme, now, influenced by the pastimes of the bliss potency of the Lord’s transcendental form, they understand they are different from the Supreme and they pray for pure devotional service. In the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.48, quoted in text 13), they describe the intense happiness of the devotees of the Lord. The phrase ‘atyantikam prasadam’ means ‘the benediction of impersonal liberation’ and the phrase ‘kimv anyat’ means ‘to say nothing of the material happiness of Indra and the other demigods.” 37 In the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.49, quoted in text 14) the Kumaras confess their own offense and pray for pure devotional service. They say: “O Supreme Personality of Godhead, before now we did not commit any sin, but now that two of Your devotees are cursed on our account, we have committed all sins. Therefore, let us (nah) be born (bhavah) in any hellish condition of life (nirayesu).” 38 They who understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead, however, never suffer a hellish life. This is described in Vedanta-sutra (4.1.13): “When one understands the Supreme Personality of Godhead the sins of both past and present are all destroyed. This is so because it is described in the Upanisads.” In this way they who understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead becomes excused from many great sins that would otherwise have cast them into a hellish condition of life. This fact shows the all-wonderful glory of the Supreme Lord, which Srimad Bhagavatam describes in the words (1.17.10): “The Lord possesses transcendental qualities.” 39 The Kumaras plead: “Let us be born in hell. We do not mind. We are not afraid of hell. (Our only request is that) we may never have the misfortune of becoming averse to You. (We are not afraid) if our hearts and minds (cetah) are always engaged in the service (rameta) of You lotus feet (padayoh). We will be like bumblebees that taste only the sweetness of Your lotus feet and our words will be engaged in describing our direct perception of You, the Supreme Personality of Godhead.” Hearing their heart-felt plea, the Supreme Lord forgave their offense to His devotees. By His wish their offense faded into non existence. In this way the passage should be understood. 40 In these two verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.49-50, quoted in text 14 and 15) the Kumaras say: “Because it is not impossible to serve You in hell, for us, who desire only devotional service, hell is better than impersonal liberation (where it is not possible to serve You). Our devotional service to You is the very wonderful success of our lives. In the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.50, quoted in text 15) the Kumaras says: “You do not appear before less intelligent persons (anatmanam), who do not have unalloyed devotion for You, although You have appeared before us (it pratitah). We offer (vidhema) our respectful obeisances (namah) to You (tasmai). 41 The four Kumaras are the spiritual masters of all other spiritual masters perfect in knowledge. They are the spiritual masters of the great paramahamsa sages. This is described by Sri Amsuman in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 9.8.23): “O my Lord, sages freed from the influence of the three modes of material nature - sages such as the four Kumaras (Sanat, Sanaka, Sanandana and Sanatana) - are able to think of You, who are concentrated knowledge. But how can an ignorant person like me think of You?” 42 The exalted position of the four Kumaras is also described by Lord Brahma in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.7.5): “To create different planetary systems I had to undergo austerities and penance, and the Lord, thus being pleased with me, incarnated in four sanas (Sanaka, Sanatkumara, Sanandana, and Sanatana). In the previous creation the spiritual truth was devastated, but the four sanas explained it so nicely that the truth at once became clearly perceived by the sages.”* 43 The Kumaras are also glorified in Chandogya Upanisad (7.26.2): “To a person whose heart is cleansed of all impurity Lord Sanat-kumara reveals the Absolute Truth, who is beyond the darkness of ignorance.” 44 For a transcendentalist who has not yet attained the perfectional stage of spiritual realisation, anima-siddhi and the other mystic powers are obstacles to his progress. For the transcendentalist who has already attained perfection of spiritual realisation, however, they are not obstacles. This is explained by Lord Kapiladeva in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.28.38): “The body of such a liberated yogi, along with the senses, is taken charge of by the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and its functions until its destined activities are finished. The liberated devotee, being awake to his constitutional position and thus situated in samadhi, the highest perfectional stage of yoga, does not accept the by-products of his body as his own. Thus he considers his bodily activities to be like the activities of a body in a dream.”* 45 Although they were transcendentalists free the illusion of duality created by the modes of material nature, (because they were impersonalists) by the Supreme Personality of Godhead’s desire, which can do any impossible thing, the Kumaras were still filled with anger and other vices (as was seen in their anger directed to the gatekeepers of Vaikuntha). Although they were impersonalists always plunged in the bliss of impersonal Brahma, (they became personalists, devotees by contact with the Lord Himself) as is described in Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.43-45 (quoted in texts 8-10). 46 In other places also it is said that the hearts of those who are actually advanced in spiritual life (the devotees) are not disturbed by material imperfections. In Srimad Bhagavatam (7.15.35) Narada Muni says: “When one’s consciousness is uncontaminated by material lusty desires, it becomes calm and peaceful in all activities, for one is situated in eternal blissful life. Once situated on that platform, one does not return to materialistic activities.”* 47 In this way the impersonalist Kumaras became attracted to the bliss of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Other impersonalist atmaramas also became attracted to the Lord and became devotees. In the scriptures is the example of Srila Sukadeva Gosvami (Srimad Bhagavatam 12.12.69): “Let me offer my respectful obeisances unto my spiritual master, the son of Vyasadeva, Sukadeva Gosvami. It is he who defeats all inauspicious things within this universe. Although in the beginning he was absorbed in the happiness of Brahman realisation and was living in a secluded place, giving up all other kinds of consciousness, he became attracted by the most melodious pastimes of Lord Krsna. He therefore mercifully spoke the supreme Purana, known as Srimad Bhagavatam, which is the light of the Absolute Truth and which describes the activities of Lord Krsna.”* 48 At this point someone may ask: “Do the activities of devotional service follow popular custom or the ancient samskara rituals?” The answer is given: Neither of them. Devotional service is beyond the material sphere. Here the example of an intoxicated person who cannot understand whether he is wearing clothing is given in Srimad Bhagavatam (3.28.37): “Because he has achieved his real identity, the perfectly realised soul has no conception of how the material body is moving or acting, just as an intoxicated person cannot understand whether or not he has clothing on his body.”* 49 Another example of the devotees’ aloofness from material desire is seen in the following statement (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.12): “Lord Brahma said: My four sons Sanaka, Sanatana, Sanandana and Sanat-kumara, who were born from my mind, are your predecessors. Sometimes they travel throughout the material and spiritual skies without any definite desire.”* The Kumaras were absorbed in thought of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. 50 The devotees’ attachment to the Lord is described in Srimad Bhagavatam (3.15.37): “The Lord’s feet are sought for by recluses and great sages.”* The devotees overcome any obstacle fate may place between them and the Lord. 51 The devotees are also described in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam (5.3.11): “Dear Lord, all the great sages who are thoughtful and saintly persons incessantly recount Your spiritual qualities. These sages have already burned up all the unlimited dirty things and, by the fire of knowledge, strengthened their detachment from the material world. Thus they have attained Your qualities and are self-satisfied. Yet even for those who feel spiritual bliss in chanting Your attributes, Your personal presence is very rare.”* In this prose passage the devotees’ exclusive faith in the Lord is described. 52 The devotees are again described in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 12.12.69): “The devotees’ hearts are attracted to the charming pastimes of the invincible Supreme Personality of Godhead.” 53 The sight of the Lord gives great pleasure to the devotees. The Kumaras say (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.50): “O Lord, we therefore offer our respectful obeisances unto Your eternal form as the Personality of Godhead, which You have so kindly manifested before us. Your supreme, eternal form cannot be seen by unfortunate, less intelligent persons, but we are so much satisfied in our mind and vision to see it.”* 54 Someone may say that although, as the previous verse said, the Lord brings happiness to the eyes, the Lord himself is aloof and does not love anyone. This is not true, for another verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.39) says: “The Lord’s affectionate smiling and glancing touch the core of the heart.”* 55 Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavan) attracts and delights the impersonalists and other transcendentalists, the spiritual substance named Brahman should be understood to be actually a feature of Lord Bhagavan. The Kumaras are an example of impersonalists who became attracted to Lord Bhagavan (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.43): “When the breeze carrying the aroma of tulasi leaves from the toes of the lotus feet of the Personality of Godhead entered the nostrils of those sages, they experienced a change both in body and in mind, even though they were attached to the impersonal Brahman understanding.”* 56 Beyond the bliss of Brahman is a more intense stage of spiritual realisation where one is filled with wonderful bliss by gazing at the wonderful limbs of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. It is not appropriate to say otherwise. This bliss is a manifestation of the Lord’s own pastime potency. 57 At this point someone may protect: “Is it not so that because the bliss of Bhagavan is limited to a specific form, therefore the bliss of the formless, and therefore unlimited, Brahman is greater? Brahman appears in the thoughts of a person situated in pure goodness. When Bhagavan is manifested in the most pure form of the mode of goodness, then it becomes one with Brahman. In this way the truth of Bhagavan becomes manifested. In this way it is said that impersonal Brahman and the form of the Bhagavan are one and the same. In whatever form Brahman is manifest, the same formless bliss is present. That bliss does not have the slightest scent of a relationship with any specific form. That bliss is caused by meditation on the impersonal Brahman. Therefore, in the light of this evidence, how can it be said that the Absolute truth has a form? 58 In your opinion you have said that the impersonal Brahman appears in the thoughts of one who is pure and that by abandoning all partial, imperfect conceptions of God, and by becoming enlightened with genuine spiritual knowledge, the impersonal Brahman, the complete, final aspect of the Absolute Truth, becomes manifest. It is because of your incomplete knowledge and your attachment to the impersonal idea of God that you do not accept the truth that God has form and qualities. When you say the form and qualities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are manifestations of the mode of pure goodness, what do you mean? Do you mean that they are transformations of the mode of pure goodness or have a large quantity of the mode of pure goodness. The first proposal, that they are transformations of the mode of pure goodness is clearly not true, for it has already been explained that it is not possible for something to be a transformation of the mode of goodness without some mixture of the mode of passion. The second proposal, that they have a large quantity of the mode of pure goodness, is also not true for that statement would imply that some other modes are also present and the goodness is not pure, but mixed with other modes. This idea makes meaningless the word ‘visuddha’ (pure) in the Srimad Bhagavatam (10.2.34) statement ‘sattvam visuddham srayate bhavan sthitau’ (O Lord, You manifest several incarnations, all with transcendental bodies, beyond the material modes of nature).* At this point our opponent may say: 'All right, the form and qualities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are in the mode of pure goodness, but they are certainly not spiritual. That is not possible. You can forget about thinking that they are different from the material energy." To this I reply: If the sages see the spiritual nature present in the mode of perfectly pure goodness, then your argument is refuted because the inference you make is not valid. 59 The four Kumaras affirm that the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is spiritual in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.38): "The sages, headed by Sanaka Rsi, saw that the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Visnu, who was formerly visible only within their hearts in ecstatic trance, had now actually become visible to their eyes."* In this quote the direct perception of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described and the ideas that the Absolute Truth is invisible to all eyes, the pure goodness of the Lord's form is material, the Lord's form is a transformation of the mode of goodness and the Lord's form has a large quantity of the mode of goodness, are all refuted. The truth, as has already been described, is that the Lord's form is self-manifest, that is, manifest by the mode of pure goodness. In this way the ideas that the Lord's form is material or that the Lord has no form, are both refuted and the wonder of the bliss of the direct perception of the Lord's form is clearly established. In this way, by the description of the direct seeing of the Lord's form and by the description of the Lord's handsomeness, the truth that the Lord's form is pure transcendental goodness is clearly proved. 60 In the words 'The sages gazed at the form of the Lord with unsated eyes' Srimad Bhagavatam (3.15.42) confirms the transcendental nature of the Lord's form by explaining that the sages could never become sated by gazing at the Lord's form. 61 In the passage beginning with the word 'ca' (and) (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.41-42) it is seen that the breeze carrying the aroma of the Lord's lotus feet defeats the impersonal Brahman. If this were not so, then in both these passages the formlessness of the happiness of impersonal Brahman would have been described (and not the form of the Lord) and the word 'aksara-jusam' (attached to the impersonal Brahman understanding) would be replaced by the word 'vidya-jusam' (attached to transcendental knowledge). This is so because these two rival conceptions (the personal and impersonal definition of God) are mutually exclusive. In this way it may be understood that, just as Vasistha Muni easily conquered the slightest possibility of grieving over the death of his sons, so the bliss of the slightest glimpse of the personal form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead easily conquers the happiness of perceiving the impersonal Brahman. In this way the arguments of the impersonalists are refuted. Srila Sridhara Svami comments here (3.15.43): "The bliss of serving the Lord is greater even than the bliss of directly seeing Him." This explanation (by Sridhara Svami) is certainly a source of great wonder. 62 For this reason the Kumaras offer the following wonderful prayer (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.49): "O Lord, we pray that You let us be born in any hellish condition of life, just as long as our hearts and minds are always engaged in the service of Your lotus feet, our words are made beautiful (by speaking of Your activities) just as tulasi leaves are beautified when offered unto Your lotus feet, and as long as our ears are always filled with the chanting of Your transcendental qualities."* 63 The Nyaya-sastra says: "If honey is nearby, why go to a mountain to search for it?" There is no need to search for another, a more complicated, less obvious explanation for all this. The meaning is clear. 64 In these verses it is not stated that the jivas are non-different from the Supreme Personality of Godhead, but rather, the opposing view, that they are different, is clearly given. For example, in Srimad Bhagavatam (3.15.42) it is said: "The sages regarded Him (the Lord) with unsated eyes and joyously bowed their heads at His lotus feet."* Also, the Kumaras say (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.49): "O Lord, we pray that You let us be born in any hellish condition of life, just as long as our hearts and minds are always engaged in the service of Your lotus feet, our words are made beautiful (by speaking of Your activities) just as tulasi leaves are beautified when offered unto Your lotus feet, and as long as our ears are always filled with the chanting of Your transcendental qualities."* In these passages is seen the happiness of pure devotional service, where the devotee offers respectful obeisances to the Lord and knows that he is different from the Lord. All of this, of course is the opposite (of the impersonal view, where one thinks himself one with the Lord). The impersonalists' view is an illusion of the worst kind and the happiness of impersonal realisation is also an illusion. Because they are filled with knowledge of the truth, the devotees do not misunderstand this illusory happiness, thinking it something other than it is. the spiritual pastimes of the Lord, however, are, manifested from His personal, internal potency, which is perfect and completely different from the happiness of impersonal Brahman. 65 The devotees' conception of liberation, where one becomes free from all material designations and understands the Supreme Personality of Godhead, is the truth. It is better than the impersonalists' conception of liberation, where, staying in the material world, one sees everything as a reflection of Brahman. This is confirmed by the four Kumaras in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.48): "Persons who are very expert and most intelligent in understanding things as they are engage in hearing narrations of the auspicious activities and pastimes of the Lord, which are worth chanting and worth hearing. Such persons do not care even for the highest material benediction, namely liberation, to say nothing of other less important benedictions like the material happiness of the heavenly kingdom."* From this we may understand that a devotee does not consider one status of material life better than another. 66 That the wonderful liberation of the devotees is better than the varietyless Brahman liberation of the impersonalists is confirmed by Srimad Bhagavatam (3.15.48): "Persons who are very expert and most intelligent in understanding things as they are engage in hearing narrations of the auspicious activities and pastimes of the Lord, which are worth chanting and worth hearing. Such persons do not care even for the highest material benediction, namely liberation, to say nothing of other less important benedictions like the material happiness of the heavenly kingdom."* From this we may understand that the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the master of wonderful internal potencies, has a form of transcendental bliss. That the wonder of the pastimes and potencies in His form is more significant than the impersonal Brahman is confirmed by the personal experience of the wise. This is described in Srila Sridhara Svami's commentary on Srimad Bhagavatam (10.87.21): "Giving up their material bodies, the devotees become liberated and worship the Lord by enjoying transcendental pastimes with Him." This is also described in Nrsimha-tapani Upanisad (2.4): "All the demigods, brahmavadis, and sages who aspire for liberation, meditate on the Supreme Personality of Godhead." The word 'brahmavadi' here means 'the spiritual masters of the impersonalists." This is also described in Mahabharata: "Lord Krsna is worshipped by liberated souls free from illusion." 67 This is also described in Bhagavad-gita (18.54): "One who is thus transcendentally situated at once realises the Supreme Brahman and becomes fully joyful. He never laments or desires to have anything. He is equally disposed toward every living entity. In that state he attains pure devotional service unto Me."* 68 This is also confirmed by the following statement of Sruti-sastra quoted in Sripada Madhvacarya's commentary on Mahabharata: "The devotional service performed by liberated souls is full of eternal bliss." This is also confirmed by Vedanta-sutra (4.1.12): "After liberation the process of devotional service continues."* This is also confirmed in the following statement of Suparna-sruti quoted in Sripada Madhvacarya's commentary: "One should always worship the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Even after attaining liberation one should continue to worship Him. The liberated souls worship Him." 69 This is also confirmed by the following statement, where, discussing Prahlada Maharaja, Bali Maharaja and other great devotees, Sri Visnu Purana (2.5.7) says: "Even when placed in hell, what liberated soul does not continue to love the Supreme Personality of Godhead?"

1 All goals of life are situated within the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is described in Srimad Bhagavatam (5.3.7-8) where the rtvig priests say to Lord Yajna-purusa: “We have engaged in Your worship with many things and have offered sacrifices unto You, but we think that there is no need for so many arrangements to please Your Lordship. All of life’s goal and opulences are directly, self-sufficiently, unceasingly, and unlimitedly increasing in You at every moment. Indeed, You are unlimited enjoyment and blissful existence itself.”* 2 Srila Sridhara Svami comments: “This verse says ‘All of life's goals and opulences (purusartha) are directly (anasa), self-sufficiently (atmanah), increasingly and unlimitedly (asesa) increasing (bobhuyamana) in You (svarupa) at every moment (anusavanam). Indeed, You are unlimited enjoyment and blissful existence itself.'"* 3 This is also described in Chandogya Upanisad (3.14.2): "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is all desires, all fragrances, all tastes."

1 Brahman and Bhagavan are both the same Supreme. Although They are considered separately, the descriptions of the experiences of the wise confirm that They are one. They are one truth described in two words. They are not in fact different. 2 Still, the difference between Them is not only in name but also in appearance. The Supreme thus manifests Himself in two ways according to two different views and in these two ways He is worshipped. Because both of these views are true it should not be thought that one of these views is true and the other is an illusion. Because (the scriptures affirm that) They are not partial transformations of the potency of something else, Brahman and Bhagavan are not two different transformations of a single original substance. From this view it is understood that Brahman and Bhagavan are both the same and different. The view that They are only the same is the result of not carefully examining Them both. They are different. The first difference is that Brahman only stays in one place. The second difference is that Brahman is devoid of any variety. A conception of something that cannot describe its qualities is an incomplete conception. The conception of Brahma is like that. A conception of something that describes its many wonderful qualities is a complete conception. The conception of the form of Bhagavan is like that. 3 The meaning of this is that because there are different levels of spiritual realisation, there are also different levels of manifestation of the Supreme. There are two reasons the great Srimad Bhagavatam was manifested. These two reasons are explained in the following six verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.5.4,7,8,12,37,38): 4 Sri Narada said: You have fully delineated the subject of impersonal Brahman as well as the knowledge derived therefrom. Why should you be despondent in spite of all this, thinking that you are undone, my dear prabhu?* 5 "Like the sun, your goodness can travel everywhere in the three worlds and like the air you can penetrate the internal region of everyone. As such, you are as good as the all-pervasive Supersoul. Please, therefore, find out the deficiency in me, despite my being absorbed in transcendence under disciplinary regulations and vows.* 6 Sri Narada said: You have not actually broadcast the sublime and spotless glories of the Personality of Godhead. That philosophy which does not satisfy the transcendental senses of the Lord is considered worthless.* 7 "Knowledge of self-realisation, even though free from all material affinity, does not look well if devoid of a conception of the infallible (God). What, then, is the use of fruitive activities, which are naturally painful from the very beginning and transient by nature, if they are not utilised for the service of the Lord?* 8 "Let us all chant the glories of Vasudeva along with His plenary expansions Pradyumna, Aniruddha and Sankarsana.* 9 "Thus he is the actual seer who worships, in the form of transcendental sound representation, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Visnu, who has no material form. 10 These many different verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.5.4-7, 8, 12, 37, 38 quoted in texts 4-9) have been discussed here only briefly and not at length. Srila Sridhara Svami comments on the first of these verses: "This verse means 'You (tvaya) have fully delineated (jijnasitam) the subject of impersonal Brahman (brahma), which is eternal (sanatanam), as well as the knowledge derived therefrom (vicaritam). Why should you be despondent (socasi) in spite of all this (tathapi)?'" 11 Srimad Bhagavatam 1.5.7 (quoted in text 5) means 'Because you are empowered by Lord Visnu, like the sun your goodness can travel everywhere in the three worlds, and like the air you can penetrate the internal region of everyone. You are the witness who knows what is inside the hearts of all living beings. You know all that happens both externally and also within the heart. As such you are as good as the all-pervasive Supersoul. I am absorbed in transcendence under disciplinary vows.' This is also described by the sage Yajnavalkya in the following words: 12 "The ultimate result of worship, righteous conduct, mercy, non violence, charity, Vedic study, and pious deeds, is the direct vision of the Supreme Personality of Godhead in yogic trance." 13 The second part of the verse means 'Please, therefore, find out the deficiency in me, despite my being absorbed in transcendence under disciplinary regulations and vows, and in Vedic study to understand the preliminary truth of Brahman described in the scriptures." 14 The next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.5.8, quoted in text 6) means 'Without worship of the Lord, which means description of his glories, mere knowledge of dry, impersonal Brahman does not please the Supreme Personality of Godhead. I think that (impersonal) philosophy is worthless. This is made more clear by the next quote (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.5.12, quoted in text 7). 15 Srila Sridhara Svami comments (on Srimad Bhagavatam 1.5.12, quoted in text 7): 'In this verse the word 'naiskarmyam' means both 'spiritual realisation' and 'freedom from fruitive work'. And 'niranjanam' means 'free from designations'. This kind of knowledge of self realisation does not look well if it is devoid of love for the infallible Supreme Personality of Godhead. At the time of performing actions and also at the time of obtaining the results of actions, this kind of knowledge is full of pain (abhadram). The word 'ca' (and) here means that this description applies to both fruitive and non fruitive work. If work is not offered to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, how can it be auspicious (sobhate)? It is not auspicious because it has no relation to the Supreme Lord and because it does not purify the heart." In this way knowledge of self realisation, even though free from all material affinity (does not look well). Because this verse is very important it is repeated verbatim after the Tenth Canto (12.12.52). The conclusion of these two verses is that loving devotional service is the way to directly see the Supreme Lord. 16 In the next verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.5.37 and 38, quoted in Texts 8 and 9) the word 'mantra-murtim' means either "He whose form is described in mantras', or 'He whose form is identical with mantras'. The word 'amurtikam' means either 'He who does not have a form described in mantras' or 'He whose form is not material.' This means His form is not material either because He and His form are identical, or because He is not different from His form. Thus the Supreme Personality of Godhead is directly visible (in the form of mantra).

1 In terms of different levels of philosophical understanding and different levels of manifestations of the Supreme, Bhagavan (the Supreme Personality of Godhead) is the best. With His exalted transcendental qualities Bhagavan attracts the self-realised souls (atmaramas). This is confirmed in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.7.10): 2 “All different varieties of atmaramas (those who take pleasure in atma, or spirit self), especially those established on the path of self-realisation, though freed from all kinds of material bondage, desire to render unalloyed devotional service unto the Personality of Godhead. This means that the Lord possesses transcendental qualities and therefore can attract everyone, including liberated souls.”* 3 Srila Sridhara Svami comments: “The word ‘nirgrantha’ here means ‘they who are above the injunctions of the scriptures’. This is described in Bhagavad-gita (2.52): “When your intelligence has passed out of the dense forest of delusion, you shall become indifferent to all that has been heard and all that is to be heard.”* 4 “Or the word ‘nirgrantha’ may also be interpreted to mean ‘they who have cut the knots (of material desire) in the heart’. “Someone may ask, ‘What is the use of devotional service for they who are already liberated?” The answer is given that even the liberated souls engage in devotional service to remove all calamities. Also, the Lord is full of wonderful qualities (ittham-bhuta-gunah) (and thus the liberated souls are attracted to serve Him).”

1 That Bhagavan (the Supreme Personality of Godhead) is the supreme form of God is confirmed by the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.24.43-47): “He fixed his mind upon the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Parabrahman, who is beyond cause and effect, who manifests the three modes of material nature, who is beyond those three modes, and who is perceived only through unfailing devotional service.* 2 “Thus he gradually became unaffected by the false ego of material identity and became free from material affection. Undisturbed, equal to everyone and without duality, he could indeed see himself also. His mind was turned inward and was perfectly calm, like an ocean unagitated by waves.* 3 “He thus became liberated from conditioned life and became self situated in transcendental devotional service to the Personality of Godhead, Vasudeva, the omniscient Supersoul within everyone.* 4 “He began to see that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is seated in everyone’s heart, and that everyone is existing on Him, because He is the Supersoul of everyone.* 5 “Freed from all hatred and desire, Kardama Muni, being equal to everyone because of discharging uncontaminated devotional service, ultimately attained the path back to Godhead.”* 6 In Srimad Bhagavatam 3.24.43 (quoted in text 1) the word ‘eka-bhaktya’ means ‘by unfailing sadhana-bhakti (devotional service in practice).’ ‘Anubhavite” means ‘eternally perceived’. Without devotional service the goal of life is not attained. In the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.24.44 quoted in text 2) the words ‘nirahankrtir nirmanah’ means ‘Because of being unaffected by the false ego of material identity, he became free from material affection.’ Because he was free from false ego and material affection, he also became free form the mind and senses. 7 The word ‘sama-drk’ means ‘seeing equally’. ‘Sva-drk’ means ‘seeing himself as spirit’. ‘Pratyak’ means ‘turned inward’. ‘Prasanta’ means ‘unagitated’. ‘Dhih’ means ‘knowledge’. In the stage of sadhana-bhakti, where devotion is mixed with knowledge of Brahman, he attained perception of Brahman and then later, on the strength of pure bhakti, he developed love for the Supreme and after that he was able to see the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is described in the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.24.45, quoted in text 3). 8 In this verse the word ‘pratyag-atmani- means ‘present within everyone’. ‘Parena bhakti-bhavena’ means ‘by the power of loving devotional service.’ In this way He became free from false ego and other material imperfections and attained the Supreme Personality of Godhead. By knowledge of Brahman he became free of material false ego, but when he became purified by the bliss of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, he attained his real ego, his real identity. 9 At this point someone may object: ‘Is it not so the liberated devotee will return again to the state of material bondage, for the causes of bondage still remain in him? To this I reply: No. The verse said ‘mukta-bandhanah’ (He becomes liberated). This is confirmed by Vedanta-sutra (4.4.22) ‘By the sound vibration of the

Vedic scriptures one becomes liberated and does not return to the world of birth and death.' This proves that by great devotion one attains the Supreme Personality of Godhead. 10 In the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.24.46, quoted in text 4) the word 'atmanam' means 'the independent Supersoul'. The meaning here is that the Supersoul is a manifestation of Lord Bhagavan (the Supreme Personality of Godhead). How one attains the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.24.47 quoted in text 5). There it is said that being free of hatred and desire, which are abominable, and being equal to everyone, he attained the path back to Godhead. This (equanimity and freedom from hatred and desire) is described in Srimad Bhagavatam (6.17.28) in these words: 11 "Devotees solely engaged in the devotional service of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Narayana, never fear any condition of life. For them the heavenly planets, liberation and the hellish planets are all the same, for such devotees are interested only in the service of the Lord."* 12 The word 'sama' in Srimad Bhagavatam 3.24.47 (quoted in text 5) may also be interpreted as a name of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is described in the commentary on Sri Visnu-sahasra-name-stotra: 'The word 'sama' here means 'He who stays with Mother Laksmi'. In this way the word 'sama-cetasa' may mean 'with heart and mind fixed on the Supreme Personality of Godhead'. In this verse the phrase 'prapto bhagavatim gatim' is an alternate reading for the last line. In this reading nominative-case 'praptah' refers to Kardama Muni and the goal he attained is in the accusative case. In these statements the yoga of devotional service to the Supreme Personality of Godhead is clearly described. 13 This is described in Bhagavad-gita (18.51-55): "Being purified by His intelligence and controlling the mind with determination, giving up the objects of sense gratification, being free from attachment and hatred, one who lives in a secluded place, who eats little, who controls his body, mind and power of speech, who is always in trance and who is detached, free from false ego, false strength, false pride, lust, anger, and acceptance of material things, free from false proprietorship, and peaceful -such a person is certainly elevated to the position of self-realisation.* 14 "One who is thus transcendentally situated at once realises the Supreme Brahman and becomes fully joyful. He never laments of desires to have anything. He is equally disposed toward every living entity. In that state he attains pure devotional service unto Me.* 15 "One can understand Me as I am, as the Supreme Personality of Godhead, only by devotional service. And when one is in full consciousness of Me by such devotion, he can enter into the kingdom of God."* 16 In this last verse (Bhagavad-gita 18.55) the word 'visate' means 'enters' in the sense of entering a place in order to meet someone (and not in the sense of merging and becoming one with the place entered), as in the statement 'Leaving Duryodhana, the king entered Yudhisthira's (palace). In his commentary on the Tenth Canto of Srimad Bhagavatam, Srila Sridhara Svami says: 'The gopas then saw the world of Vaikuntha, which is above the splendour of the Brahman effulgence.”

1 This is described in Srimad Bhagavatam (11.19.5), where Lord Krsna says: “O Uddhava, understanding the truth about the self, and filled with theoretical spiritual knowledge, its practical application, and loving devotion, worship Me.” 2 In this verse the word ‘svatmanam’ means ‘the individual spirit soul (jiva)’. The ‘jnana and vijnana’ here are spiritual. What more need be said? This topic has already been elaborately explained by the four Kumaras, Sukadeva Gosvami and the other great devotees.

1 Touched on the cheek by the Lord’s spiritual conchshell, Dhruva, even though only a child spoke eloquent prayers. Hearing in this way of His wonderful and blissful qualities, he described the Lord’s perfection in the following words: 2 “My Lord, the transcendental bliss derived from meditating upon Your lotus feet or hearing about Your glories from pure devotees is so unlimited that it is far beyond the stage of brahmananda, wherein one thinks himself merged in the impersonal Brahman as one with the Supreme. Since brahmananda is also defeated by the transcendental bliss derived from devotional service, then what to speak of the temporary blissfulness of elevation oneself to the heavenly planets, which is ended by the separating sword of time? Although one may be elevated to the heavenly planets, he falls down in due course of time."* 3 In this verse 'sva-mahimani' means 'in uncommon magnificence', 'ma bhut' means 'is not', and 'antakasih' means 'time'. This verse is spoken by Dhruva to Lord Dhurvapriya.

1 Devotional service is better than the spiritual perfection of merging into Brahman. Lord Kapiladeva teaches this in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.25.33): “When that service spirit is engaged in devotional service to the Personality of Godhead, without any motive, that is far better even than salvation.”* 2 Srila Sridhara Svami comments: “Devotional service is better than the perfection of impersonal liberation.’ Sri Bhagavan-nama-kaumudi asserts: “Devotional service is better than mystic perfection, transcendental knowledge, or impersonal liberation.’ The verse previously quoted was spoken by Lord Kapiladeva.

1 From this it should be understood that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the ultimate, original Supreme Truth. Because it does not act as the Supreme Person does, and because it is formless and amorphous, the impersonal Brahman is not the Ultimate Truth. Lord Kapiladeva states this in the following two verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.32.32-33): 2 “Philosophical research culminates in understanding the Supreme Personality of Godhead. After achieving this understanding, when one becomes free from the material modes of nature, he attains the stage of devotional service. Either by devotional service directly or by philosophical research, one has to find the same destination, which is the Supreme Personality of Godhead.* 3 “A single object is appreciated differently by different senses due to is having different qualities. Similarly, the Supreme Personality of Godhead is one, but according to different scriptural injunctions He appears to be different.”* 4 Srila Sridhara Svami comments: “This verse states that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is attained by jnana-yoga. The jnana-yoga described here, however, is like bhakti-yoga. The verse says: 'Philosophical research (jnana-yoga) culminates in understanding the Supreme Personality of Godhead. After achieving this understanding, when one becomes free from the material modes of nature, he attains the stage of devotional service. Either by devotional service directly or by philosophical research, one has to find the same destination, which is the Supreme Personality of Godhead.' Why are jnana-yoga and bhakti-yoga the same? The answer is hinted by the phrase 'Either by devotional service directly or by philosophical research, one has to find the same destination, which is the Supreme Personality of Godhead.' This is further described in Bhagavad-gita (12.4) where the Lord says: "But those who fully worship the unmanifested, that which lied beyond the perception of the senses, the all-pervading, inconceivable, unchanging, fixed and immovable - the impersonal conception of the Absolute Truth - by controlling the various senses and being equally disposed to everyone, such persons, engaged in the welfare of all, at last achieve Me."* 5 "At this point someone may object: 'Is it not understood from the scriptures that the result of practicing jnana-yoga is attainment of the Self and the result of practicing bhakti-yoga is attainment of the worshipable Supreme Personality of Godhead? How, then, are jnana and bhakti the same?' "Fearing that this objection would be raised, the Lord proved they are the same by giving an example. He said many diverse qualities, such as form and taste, reside in milk and other substances. Although each substance is one, the different senses perceive a single substance differently and believe it to be a different kind of substance. The eyes perceive milk as white, the tongue perceives it as sweet, the touch perceives it as cool, and so forth. In the same way the Supreme Personality of Godhead is one, although he may be perceived differently.' This is the explanation of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. By the evidence given here in the example of the different senses, the true nature of devotional service should be understood.

1 The scriptures declare that Brahman is a partial expansion of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Lord Sankarsana says to King Citraketu (Srimad Bhagavatam 6.16.51): “All living entities, moving and non moving, are My expansions and are separate from Me. I am the Supersoul of all living beings, who exist because I manifest them. I am the form of the transcendental vibrations like omkara and Hare Krsna Hare Rama, and I am the Supreme Absolute Truth (Brahman). These two forms of Mine - namely, the transcendental sound and the eternally blissful spiritual form of the Deity, are My eternal forms; they are not material.'* 3 Srila Sridhara Svami comments: "In this verse the Lord says: "All living entities (sarva-bhutani) are My expansions. I am the Supersoul (atma) of all living beings (bhuta), and the supreme dictator and enjoyer of them. This world, filled with enjoyers and the objects of their enjoyment, is not separate from Me. I am the cause of all living entities (bhuta-bhavanah). I am the form of the transcendental vibrations (sabda-brahma), and I am the Supreme Absolute Truth (param brahma).' "At this point someone may object: 'Is it not true that the Supreme impersonal Brahman is the cause of transcendental vibrations (sabda-brahma)?' "The Lord answers : 'The transcendental sound and the eternally blissful spiritual form of the Deity, are My (mama) eternal (sasvati) forms (tanu); they are not material.'" In this way it is proved that the Brahman effulgence is a partial expansion of the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

1 That the impersonal, featureless Brahman is a partial expansion of the Lord's opulence is confirmed by the following statement of Lord Matsyadeva to Satyavrata (Srimad Bhagavatam 8.24.38): "You will be thoroughly advised and favoured by Me, and because of your inquiries everything about My glories, which are known as param brahma, will be manifest within your heart. Thus you will know everything about Me."* 2 In this verse the word 'mahimanam' means 'opulence that has no variety', 'me' means 'My', 'anugrhitam' means 'mercifully', 'vetsyasi hri' means 'you will know what is manifested in the heart',

'samprasnaih' means 'by your questions', and 'vivrtam' means 'revealed by Me.' Here the Lord says: "Although the perception of impersonal Brahman in the heart is Me, that is, it is not different from Me, nevertheless that impersonal Brahman is not the same as the direct perception of Me, which is had only by devotional service. If you desire to see Me directly you must engage in devotional service. 3 This is also explained by Uddhava (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.46.31): "Both Balarama and Krsna are the original personalities of Godhead from whom the cosmic manifestation is emanating. They are the chief among all personalities. Both of Them are the effective cause of this material creation. Material nature is conducted by the purusa incarnations, who are all acting under Krsna and Balarama. By Their partial representation They enter in the hearts of all living entities. They are the source of all knowledge and all forgetfulness also."* The word 'knowledge' here refers to knowledge of Brahman.

1 The Lord describes His opulences again in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.16.37): “I am earth, air, space, water, fire, false-ego, mahat-tattva, the transformations of matter, the purusa, the unmanifest, passion, goodness, ignorance and the Supreme.” Srila Sridhara Svami comments: ‘The word ‘Supreme’ here means ‘the Supreme Brahman’. 2 The great Vaisnava saint Sri Yamunacarya also explains: ‘O Lord, the material universe, everything within the universe, the ten coverings around it, the modes of nature, the unmanifested stage of matter, the purusa-avatara, the supreme spiritual world, and the Supreme Brahman, are all Your opulences.’

1 Because it has none of the variety present in the Lord's form, Brahman is said to be the bodily effulgence of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Devaki-devi explains this in her prayers to the Supreme Personality of Godhead (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.3.24): "My dear Lord, there are different Vedas, some of which describe You as unperceivable through words and the mind. Yet You are the origin of the entire cosmic manifestation. You are Brahman, the greatest of everything, full of effulgence like the sun. You have no material cause. You are free from change and deviation, and You have no material desires. Thus the Vedas say that You are the substance. Therefore, My Lord, You are directly the origin of all Vedic statements, and by understanding You, one gradually understands everything. You are different from the light of Brahman and Paramatma, yet You are not different from them. Everything emanates from You. Indeed, You are the cause of all causes, Lord Visnu, the light of all transcendental knowledge."* In this verse the word 'brahma-jyotih' means (the effulgence of the Supreme Personality of Godhead' and the word 'rupam' means 'the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead." 2 This is also explained in Sri Brahma-samhita (40): "I worship Govinda, the primeval Lord, who is endowed with great power. The glowing effulgence of His transcendental form is the impersonal Brahman, which is absolute, complete, and unlimited, and which displays the varieties of countless planets, with their different opulences, in millions and millions of universes.

1 The Supreme Personality of Godhead is superior to the impersonal Brahman. Lord Siva confirms this in his instructions to the Pracetas (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.24.28): “Any person who is surrendered to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krsna, who is above the Brahman effulgence, the material nature, and the living entity, is actually very dear to me.” 2 In this verse the word ‘rahah’ means ‘Brahman’. Greater than Brahman (rahah), the unmanifest stage of the three modes of material nature (tri-gunat), and the individual living entities (jiva-samjnitat), is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. One surrenders to Him by hearing about Him, offering the fruits of one’s work to Him, and serving Him in other ways. 3 This is also confirmed in the Visnu-dharma Purana, Naraka-dvadasi-vrata, Sri Visnu-stava: “Lord Vasudeva, the all-pervading Supersoul, is present in the sky and other material elements, in sound and other objects of sense-perception, in the ears and the other senses, in the mahat-tattva and other primordial forces, in the material energy, in the individual person, and in the impersonal Brahman splendour. This truth brings to destruction the sins that would make me suffer in hell. This truth gives me every day the glory of transcendental piety." In this context a different interpretation of the word 'sarvatma' cannot be accepted. 4 This is also confirmed by the following statement of Visnu-dharma Purana, Uttara-khanda, Ksetabandhupakhyaya: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is present in the impersonal Brahman. He is present in the unmanifested pradhana. He is present in the manifested material cosmos. I shall become His devotee." 5 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is superior to the impersonal Brahman is also confirmed in the following statement of Visnu-dharma Purana, Masarksa-puja: "O infallible Lord, O Supreme Soul greater than the impersonal Brahman, please grant my desire! O limitless Lord, please remove this danger!" 6 In the Sri Visnu Purana (1.5.55) also it is said: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is superior to the impersonal Brahman." The Sruti-sastra (Mundaka Upanisad 2.1.2) says: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is superior to the impersonal Brahman."

1 This is also confirmed in the Sruti-sastra (Taittiriya Upanisad 2.1.3-2.5.1) in the passage beginning with 'He, the Supreme Personality of Godhead is realised in His form of anna-rasa), and continuing through the statements 'The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the basis of everything...He is the basis of the earth....He is the basis of the Vedas....He is the basis of light....He is the basis of the impersonal Brahman.' This is also confirmed in the fifth Veda, the Smrti-sastra, where, in the Bhagavad-gita (14.27), Lord Krsna says: 'I am the basis of the impersonal Brahman."* In this way the statement 'I am the basis of the impersonal Brahman' is spoken in both Sruti and Smrti, and in Bhagavad-gita it is emphasized by the word 'hi' (certainly). 2 Immediately preceding these words is the following statement (Bhagavad-gita 14.26): "One who engages in full devotional service, unfailing in all circumstances, at once transcends the modes of material nature and thus comes to the level of Brahman."* 3 This is the verse immediately preceding the statement 'I am the basis of Brahman'. In this verse, by saying that Brahman is 'beyond the modes of material nature' it is clear that the Brahman here is the impersonal Brahman potency and not the demigod Brahma. 4 At this point someone may ask the Lord: "Why is devotional service to You (Bhagavad-gita 14.26, quoted in text 2) the means of attaining impersonal Brahman? One would expect that impersonal Brahman is attained only by meditation on Brahman (and not by devotion to You).' The Lord answers this question with the words: 'I am the basis of the impersonal Brahma.' In the Sruti-sastra (Taittiriya Upanisad 2.2.5.) the answer is also given: 'The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the basis of the impersonal Brahman'. In this way the Sruti-sastra affirms that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the ultimate basis of everything. Also, in that same passage of Taittiriya Upanisad, the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described as full of bliss. This is also confirmed by the author of Vedanta-sutra (1.1.12): 'The Supreme Personality of Godhead is by nature full of joy'. As the sun-globe is full of light, so the blissful Supreme Personality of Godhead is also (full of the light of Brahman). For this reason the Lord says: 'I am the basis of the impersonal Brahman." The Lord may say: 'Although there is no difference between the impersonal Brahman and Me, nevertheless I am the origin of the Brahman. I am the ultimate. This is so because I am the origin and impersonal Brahman is My potency. The origin is naturally superior to its potency. This is so also because the Sruti-sastra affirms that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is superior to the impersonal Brahman. Although I, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and the impersonal Brahman, are one, We are also different as the splendid sun is different from the slender crescent moon. Therefore, because the impersonal Brahman is subordinate to Me, a person who, with the desire for impersonal liberation, worships me, will attain the impersonal Brahman." 5 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the origin of the impersonal Brahma is also explained in Sri Visnu Purana (6.7.75): “The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the basis of the all-pervading Supersoul and the impersonal Brahman.” Srila Sridhara Svami comments: “This verse means that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the basis of the all-pervading Supersoul and the impersonal Brahman. The word ‘asraya’ here means ‘basis’. This is also confirmed in Bhagavad-gita (14.27), where Lord Krsna says, ‘I am the basis of the impersonal Brahman.’” In his commentary on this verse in Bhagavad-gita, Srila Sridhara Svami says: “The Lord here says, ‘I am the basis of the impersonal Brahman.’ This means that the Lord says, ‘As the sun-globe is more important than mere light, so I am more important than the impersonal Brahman.’ 6 The word ghani-bhuta here is a use of the grammatical form cvi-pratyaya. The Supreme Personality of Godhead appears in the hearts of the devotees, but the impersonal Brahman does not appear there. The interpretation that the word ‘pratistha’ in this verse (Bhagavad-gita 14.27) means ‘pratima’ (reflected) is the idea of envious men. This interpretation is not true, for it makes no sense in this context. As the sun planet is not a reflection of the sunshine, so the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is not a reflection of the formless Brahman. The remaining three lines of this stanza (Bhagavad-gita 14.27) do not describe the liberation of the impersonalists. Neither do the verses we have quoted from Visnu Purana and Sruti-saili describe it. The interpretation that ‘pratistha’ means ‘pratima’ should not be accepted, or if it is accepted, then ‘pratima’ should be interpreted to mean ‘basis’ and not ‘reflection’. If this second interpretation is accepted, then the word ‘pratima’ is understood to be derived from the preposition ‘prati’ (toward) and the verb ‘ma’ (to create). 7 This is all also explained in the following prayer (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.17) spoken by the Personified Vedas to the Supreme Personality of Godhead: “My dear Lord, it is imperative that the living entities be engaged in Krsna consciousness, always rendering devotional service by prescribed methods such as hearing and chanting and executing Your orders. If a person is not engaged in Krsna consciousness and devotional service, it is useless of him to exhibit the symptoms of life. Generally it is accepted that if a person is breathing he is alive. But a person without Krsna consciousness may be compared to a bellows in a blacksmith’s shop. The big bellows is a bag of skin which exhales and inhales air, and a human being who is simply living within the bag of skin and bones without taking to Krsna consciousness and loving devotional service is no better than the bellows. Similarly a non devotee’s long duration of life is compared to the long existence of a tree, his voracious eating capacity is compared to the eating of dogs and hogs, and his enjoyment in sex life is compared to that of hogs and goats. The cosmic manifestation has been possible because of the entrance of the Supreme Personality of Godhead as Maha-Visnu within this material world. The total material energy becomes agitated by the glance of Maha-Visnu and only then does the interaction of the three material qualities begin. Therefore it should be concluded that whatever material facilities we are trying to enjoy are available only due to the mercy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. “Within the body are five different departments of existence, known as annamaya, pranamaya, manomaya, vijnanamaya, and anandamaya. O Lord, You are present in all these five stages.”* 8 In this verse the word ‘anubhrtah’ means ‘individual living entities (jivas), whose breathing is like the breathing of a blacksmith’s bellows’. The verse says: “If (yadi) the people become Your devotees (anuvidhah), then their breathing and living is meaningful. We consider that the life passed by Your devotees is the actually meaningful life among the lives of the living entities. Why? You mercifully created the material universe with its many parts such as mahat-tattva and false ego. Therefore they who are averse to You, turning their faces from You, are no better than ‘breathing’ blacksmith’s bellows. You further showed Your mercy when You personally entered the material universe made of mahat-tattva, false-ego and its other parts.” 9 The Lord here may ask: “Why is it that these things become possible only when I enter the universe?” The personified Vedas then reply: “You are the Supreme Brahman, eternal, dear, and known as anandamaya. You are above the stage of annamaya. You are the Brahman, the basis of everything.” This is confirmed in all Vedic literatures. In the Bhagavad-gita the Lord Himself said: “I am the basis of the impersonal Brahman” (14.27). In many other places in Vedic literature this is proven. 10 This is proven in Srimad Bhagavatam (2.9.4): “O king, the Personality of Godhead, being very much pleased with Lord Brahma because of his non deceptive penance in bhakti yoga, presented His eternal and transcendental form before Brahma. And that is the objective goal for purifying the conditioned soul.”* This verse proves, O Lord, that the real nature of the Supreme is You, the form of the Personality of Godhead. Of the purusas beginning with the annamaya-purusa, You are the ultimate, the anandamaya-purusa. O the priya-brahma, moda-brahma, paramoda-brahma, and ananda-brahma, You are the supremely blissful ananda-brahma. Because Your form is the origin of all transcendental bliss, Your entrance into the material world makes it possible for the world to function. This is also confirmed by the Sruti-sastra (Taittiriya Upanisad 2.7): “If the blissful Personality of Godhead is not present in the sky of the heart, who is able to breathe and remain alive?” 11 In this matter the following may be said. Although in the single form of the Supreme many variegated qualities are present, nevertheless, they are only seen with special vision given by the power of the Lord. They cannot be seen in any other way. An example may be given of the sun planet. For material eyes the sun planet is merely a circle of light, although the truth is that within the sun is an assembly of great demigods. From this example may be seen that only by devotional service is the whole truth about the nature of the Supreme understood. By adherence to the philosophy of impersonalism only a portion of the Supreme is understood. That partial manifestation of the Supreme is the impersonal Brahman. By impersonal philosophy only a very general understanding of the Supreme Truth is attained, an understanding unable to see the many diverse qualities present in the Lord.

For this reason the impersonal philosophy is situated outside the real truth. The great devotees directly see that the Supreme is filled with a great variety of wonderful transcendental qualities, although the impersonalists mistakenly think He is only a ball of light. In this way it is said that the Supreme has His lesser manifestations, His partial manifestations, and His potencies. The complete understanding of the Supreme is that the Supreme is the Personality of Godhead. His bodily effulgence, which is a vague and generalised manifestation of His form, is the Brahman. Therefore He is the basis of the impersonal Brahman. 12 This is also confirmed by Sruti-sastra: "There is only one Supreme Personality of Godhead. He is Lord Narayana. He is transcendental, self-manifest, and sinless. The earth is His body. The soul is His body. The unmanifest pradhana is His body. The imperishable Brahman is His body. He is the Supersoul present in all creatures." 13 This statement teaches that the imperishable (aksara), which here means Brahman, and the Supersoul, are Lord Narayana. That the word 'aksara' here means 'Brahman' is confirmed by the usage of that word in Srimad Bhagavatam 3.15.43. 14 The Supreme Personality of Godhead describes the sankhya philosophy in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.24.27): "Time merges into the Supreme Lord, present in the form of the omniscient Maha-purusa, the original activator of all living beings. That origin of all life merges into Me, the unborn Supreme Soul, who remains alone, established within Himself. It is from Him that all creation and annihilation are manifested. Only the impersonal Brahman remains and does not merge into Me." This means that at the time of cosmic annihilation only Brahman remains and the Supreme Personality of Godhead also remains as the witness of Brahman. The Lord then says (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.24.29): 15 "Thus, I the perfect seer of everything material and spiritual, have spoken this knowledge of Sankhya, which destroys the illusion of doubt by scientific analysis of creation and annihilation." 16 A discussion of Srimad Bhagavatam 11.24.29 (quoted in text 15) follows. The word 'sankhya' in this verse means 'the philosophy expounded in the sankhya scriptures.' Considering the specific feature of the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead as described in those scriptures, it is seen that the Lord's form remains unchanged at the time of cosmic annihilation. The impersonal Brahman also remains unchanged, as the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the world of Vaikuntha both also remain unchanged at the final stage of cosmic annihilation. That is what is meant to be said here. At that time the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who stays in Vaikuntha and has transcendental potencies, is seen to be different from the impersonal Brahman. However, on the other hand, the impersonal Brahman, which because it has no qualities has neither touch, form, nor any other attribute, is also non different from the Supreme Personality of Godhead because it is His bodily effulgence. This is the explanation. In this way it is proved that the impersonal Brahman is the bodily effulgence of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is filled with the sweetness of His form, touch, and other transcendental attributes. 17 This is also described in the Sri Hari-vamsa, Maha-kala-pura, where the Supreme Personality of Godhead personally says to Sriman Arjuna: “O best of the Bharatas, I am the great divine Brahman effulgence you have just seen. It is My eternal splendour. 18 “It is My divine potency. It is eternal. To some it is manifest, and to others it is not manifest. The great yogis enter it and become liberated. 19 “O son of Prtha, it is the goal of the sankhya philosophers, the yogis, and the ascetics. It is the great Brahman that pervades the entire world. O Bharata, you should know that it is My great effulgence.” 20 The verse quoted in text 18 explains that because the Brahman effulgence is the light of the Lord’s body, therefore it is His own transcendental potency. This is also confirmed by the Visnu Purana passage (quoted in Anuccheda 60) describing the Kaustubha jewel. In this way the Srimad Bhagavatam verse (10.87.17) quoted in text 7 is clearly explained.

1 Although it may also be applied to the all-pervading effulgence of the Lord's body, because the word 'brahman' means 'the greatest', it is most properly applied to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is confirmed in the following statement of the Brahma Purana: 2 "The one Supreme Lord, Visnu, is respectfully called by His many names, such as Ananta, Bhagavan, Brahman and Ananda." 3 In other places it is said that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is called Brahman because His transcendental qualities are limitless. The Padma Purana says: "Because they are limitless, the transcendental qualities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead cannot be completely described. Because He possesses all transcendental qualities, the Supreme Personality of Godhead is called Brahman (the Great). 4 "For this reason Lord Visnu is called Brahman. Because His qualities are limitless only He, and no one else, is the Supreme." 5 Now this passage will be explained. Srimad Bhagavatam (1.2.11) says: "Learned transcendentalists who know the Absolute Truth call this non dual substance Brahman, Paramatma or Bhagavan."* The Lord's feature that has no qualities is called Brahman. The Lord's feature that does have qualities is called Bhagavan. As previously explained, the Bhagavan feature has form. It is not formless. 6 Sri Visnu Purana (6.7.47) says: "O king, the Supreme Personality of Godhead has form and again He is also formless. He is transcendental, and again He is also material." In this verse of Visnu Purana four aspects of the Lord are described. If the formless aspect of the Lord is accepted, then the impersonal Brahman is the appropriate object of meditation. 7 The Supreme Personality of Godhead appears as Lord Syamasundara, Lord Caturbhuja Narayana, or one of His other transcendental forms before a devotee who sincerely loves Him. The Supreme Personality of Godhead appears as His material universal form, where Patalaloka is imagined to be His feet and the other parts of the material world are imagined to be other parts of His body, before a devotee whose love for Him is not sincere. The Supreme Personality of Godhead appears as the transcendental formless Brahman before a person attached to dry philosophical speculation. The Supreme Personality of Godhead appears as material formless fate before a devotee whose love for Him is heavily mixed with philosophical speculation. The Lord's spiritual form and His formless Brahman are not material. This means that neither the formless Brahman nor the Lord's transcendental form are inferior. 8 The Visnu Purana (6.7.69) explains: "The form of visva-rupa is Lord Hari's form as the mahat-tattva." Because the Lord creates the material universe it should be understood that He Himself is both eternal and all-powerful. The Visnu Purana (6.7.77) again explains: “The form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead does not rest on anything outside itself.” This means that the Lord’s form has no limitations.. The Visnu Purana again explains (6.7.82): “One should meditate on Lord Visnu, whose form is spiritual.” This means that the Supreme has spiritual qualities. The Visnu Purana again explains (6.7.75): “The Supreme Personality of Godhead cannot be attained by the three kinds of meditation.” Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead cannot be attained by the three kinds of meditation, namely fruitive work, philosophical speculation mixed with fruitive work, and pure philosophical speculation, because He is full of transcendental qualities, and because He appears only in response to devotional service, He is the ultimate, the real feature of the Supreme. 9 The Visnu Purana again explains (6.7.75): “The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the basis of the impersonal Brahman and the all-pervading Supersoul.” 10 This statement affirms that they who worship the form of the Lord are superior and they who worship the formless Brahman are inferior. Visnu Purana 6.7.69 quoted in text 8, affirms that the form of the Supreme is His ultimate feature. 11 This is confirmed by the next statement of the Visnu Purana (6.7.70): “O king, the Supreme Personality of Godhead displays His transcendental forms, which are like those of demigods, men, and animals, and which are endowed with all potencies, and enjoys transcendental pastimes.” 12 Srimad Bhagavatam (1.3.2) explains: “A part of the purusa lies down within the water of the universe, from the navel lake of His body sprouts a lotus stem, and from the lotus flower atop this stem, Brahma, the master of all engineers in the universe, becomes manifest.”* After describing this form of the Lord, the Bhagavatam proceeds to reveal the origin of the various incarnations of the Lord in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.3.5): “This form (the second manifestation of the purusa) is the source and indestructible seed of multifarious incarnations within the universe. From the particles and portions of this form, different living entities, like demigods, men and others, are created.”* 13 In his commentary on Visnu Purana 6.7.69 (quoted in text 8) Sripada Ramanujacarya affirms the transcendental nature of the Lord’s form. Accepting the reading ‘visva-rupa-vairupyam’ (instead ‘visva-rupa-rupam vai’), he explains that the word ‘vairupyam’ here means ‘filled with variety’. Because the material universe is filled with variety, the Lord’s universal form is also filled with variety. 14 The Lord’s form is proved by the following words of the Sruti (Svetasvatara Upanisad 3.16): “Everywhere are His hands and legs, His eyes, heads, and faces, and He has ears everywhere.”* These words do not describe a form different from the previously described all-pervading universal form. This is the universal form. 15 The universal form is described in Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda: “Youthful Lord Hari accepts the limitless universal form and, the splendour of His body like the nectar moon, enjoys pastimes with Laksmi, the mother of the universes.” 16 This verse says the universal form is limitless because it is all-pervading. Lord Hari, whose form is eternally youthful, enjoys pastimes with the goddess of fortune. That is the meaning here. The word ‘upeyivan’ here means Lord Hari is eternal, as has already been explained in the passage from Sruti sastra quoted in Anuccheda 93, text 12. Because in these passages the eternality of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is proved many times, it should be concluded that the transcendental form of the Lord is the ultimate creator of the spiritual worlds, which comprise three-fourths of His potencies. 17 The Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda also explains: “Infallible, eternal, transcendental, eternally young Lord Hari eternally enjoys pastimes with the goddesses Isvari-devi, Sri-devi and Bhumi-devi.” 18 The conclusion is that the Supreme Personality of Godhead, whose qualities are described here, is the original, primeval nature of the Supreme, whose three aspects are described in Srimad Bhagavatam 1.2.11. This is confirmed in Moksa-dharma, Sri Narayaniyopakhyana: 19 “The great sages who seek the truth with thorough philosophical analysis have concluded that the Supreme Truth is Lord Narayana, who is known as Hari and is the master of Yogamaya.” 20 This is also confirmed in Narayana Upanisad: “Narayana is the Supreme Brahman. Narayana is the ultimate truth.” 21 This is again confirmed by the following passage quoted by Sripada Ramanujacarya from the Sruti-sastra: “There is only one Supreme Personality of Godhead. He is Lord Narayana. He is transcendental, self-manifest and sinless. The earth is His body. The soul is His body. The unmanifest pradhana is His body. The imperishable Brahman is His body. He is the Supersoul present in all creatures.” In this way many scriptural passages confirm that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the ultimate aspect of the Supreme. 22 Here is has thus been proven that the Purusa-avataras and other expansions of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are the Supreme Truth and have forms that are eternal. How much more so must it be, therefore, that the original Supreme Personality of Godhead is the Supreme Truth and has a form that is eternal? In the previous portions of this book this has been confirmed by many statements, and in the latter portions of this book it will again be confirmed. 23 Again in the Visnu Purana (1.22.53-54) the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in the following words: “The Supreme Brahman has two features: a feature with form and a feature without form. These two features each have another two features: a material feature and a spiritual feature. The two formless features are both all-pervading. The spiritual formless feature is the impersonal Brahman and the material formless feature is the entire universe itself.” 24 After saying this, and after describing Lord Visnu, Lord Brahma, and Lord Siva in the material world, the Visnu Purana (1.22.58) says: “O best of the sages, the Supreme Brahman is eternal, but the material universe is a place of appearance, disappearance, birth and death.” 25 Here the word ‘aksara’ means ‘the Supreme Brahman, which is eternal’, and ‘akhila’ means ‘the material universe, which is created and destroyed’. The words ‘appearance and disappearance’ here refer to the plenary expansions of Lord Visnu, and the words ‘birth and death’ refer to everyone else. The forms of Lord Visnu do not actually become part of the material world, really entering it, when They appear within it. That is the meaning. 26 “Eternally staying in its own abode, the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, which is different from both the temporary material world and the eternal impersonal Brahman, is the third and ultimate feature of the Supreme. It is described in these words (Visnu Purana 1.22.59, 61-62): 27 “Lord Visnu, the master of all potencies, has form, and is different from the formless Brahman. Since ancient times the yogis have meditated on Him in mystic trance. 28 “He is different from His potencies, but He is not different from the impersonal Brahman. O fortunate one, His form is spiritual. Everything about Lord Hari is spiritual. He is the loom on which the material world is woven.” 29 In this passage the words ‘yogibhih purvam cintyate’ mean ‘After realising Brahman, the yogis meditate on the Supreme Personality of Godhead.’ Therefore the impersonal Brahman and the Supreme Personality of Godhead are not different. The sequence of worshipping impersonal Brahman and the Supreme Personality of Godhead, where Brahman is manifest first and then the Supreme Personality of Godhead is manifest is described in Bhagavad-gita (18.54) where the Supreme Personality of Godhead says: “One who is thus transcendentally situated at once realises the Supreme Brahman and becomes fully joyful. He never laments or desires to have anything. He is equally disposed toward every living entity. In that state He attains pure devotional service unto Me.”* 30 Here the words ‘sa parah sarva-saktinam’ mean ‘The Supreme Personality of Godhead is different from all His potencies, and therefore He is their ultimate shelter.’ ‘Sarvam brahma-mayah’ means ‘He whose form is perfectly spiritual’. Because it is not the master of potencies, the impersonal Brahman is not spiritual in perfection. The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the feature of the Lord described in Bhagavad-gita (15.15) as ‘known by all the Vedas.’ This is the meaning of ‘sarvam brahma-mayah’. 31 The Supreme Personality of Godhead describes Himself in these words (Bhagavad-gita 15.18): “Because I am transcendental, beyond both the fallible and the infallible, and because I am the greatest, I am celebrated both in the world and in the Vedas as that Supreme Person.”* 32 Although the word ‘aksara’ used in Bhagavad-gita 15.16 refers to the pure jiva (individual spirit soul), it also refers to the Supreme Brahman. Therefore the phrase ‘aksaram param brahma’ (Visnu Purana 1.22.53) quoted previously (in text 23) can refer to both the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the jiva because both are spiritual in nature. 33 The form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.43.17): “When Krsna entered the wrestling arena with Balarama and Their friends, He appeared differently to different people according to their different relationships (rasas) with Him. Krsna is the reservoir of all pleasure and all kinds of rasas, both favourable and unfavourable. He appeared to the wrestlers exactly like a thunderbolt. To the people in general He appeared as the most beautiful personality. To the females He appeared to be the most attractive male, Cupid personified, and this increased their lust.

The cowherd men who were present there looked upon Krsna as their own kinsman, coming from the same village of Vrndavana. The ksatriya kings who were present there saw Him as the strongest ruler. To the parents of Krsna, Nanda and Yasoda, He appeared to be the most loving child. To Kamsa, the king of the Bhoja dynasty, He appeared to be death personified. To the unintelligent, He appeared to be an incapable personality. To the yogis present, He appeared to be the Supersoul."* Here it is the yogis who understand Him most directly. The yogis in this verse are the great sages who have the four Kumaras as their leaders.

1 Although Srimad Bhagavatam, the mature ripened fruit of Vedic literature (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.1.3) is sublime for many reasons, it is most sublime because it teaches the truth about the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is described in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.1.2): 2 “Completely rejecting all religious activities which are materially motivated, this Bhagavata Purana propounds the highest truth, which is understandable by those devotees who are fully pure in heart. The highest truth is reality distinguished from illusion for the welfare of all. Such truth uproots the threefold miseries. This beautiful Bhagavatam, compiled by the great sage Vyasadeva (in his maturity), is sufficient in itself for God realisation. What is the need of any other scripture? As soon as one attentively and submissively hears the message of Bhagavatam, by this culture of knowledge the Supreme Lord is established within his heart.”* 3 Dharma is described in the Srimad Bhagavatam (1.2.6-12) in these words: “The supreme occupation (dharma) for all humanity is that by which men can attain to living devotional service unto the transcendental Lord. Such devotional service must be unmotivated and uninterrupted to completely satisfy the self.* “By rendering devotional service unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Krsna, one immediately acquires causeless knowledge and detachment from the world.* “The occupational duties a man performs according to his own position are only so much useless labour if they do not provoke attraction for the message of the Personality of Godhead.* “All occupational engagements are certainly meant for ultimate liberation. They should never be performed for material gain. Furthermore, according to sages, one who is engaged in the ultimate occupational service should never use material gain to cultivate sense gratification.* “Life’s desires should not be directed toward sense gratification. One should desire only a healthy life, or self-preservation, since a human being is meant for inquiry about the Absolute truth. Nothing else should be the goal of one’s works.* “Learned transcendentalists who know the absolute Truth call this non dual substance Brahman, Paramatma or Bhagavan.* “The seriously inquisitive student or sage, well equipped with knowledge and detachment, realises that Absolute Truth by rendering devotional service in terms of what he has heard from the Vedanta-sruti.” 4 Srimad Bhagavatam (1.2.13) concludes: “O best among the twice born, it is therefore concluded that the highest perfection one can achieve by discharging the duties prescribed for one’s own occupation according to caste divisions and orders of life is to please the Personality of Godhead.” 5 These verses explain that pure devotional service alone satisfies the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In Srimad Bhagavatam 1.1.2 (quoted in text 2) cheating religion, defined as religion motivated by the desire to enjoy the fruits of work, is emphatically (pra) rejected (ujjhita). The word ‘pra’ also means that even salokya-mukti and other kinds of liberated are rejected. The word ‘nirmatsara’ means ‘those who are not envious’. An envious person is one who desires the fruits of his own work and cannot tolerate others’ good fortune. Non-envious persons are kind even to the animals. They are saintly and carefully follow the principles of dharma. In this way devotional service is better than the fruitive works described in the karma-khanda and upasana-khanda parts of the Vedas. 6 The message of these parts of the Vedas is very far from pure devotional service, which begins with chanting the glories of the Lord. The word ‘vedyam’ (the highest truth) here affirms that pure devotional service is better than the jnana-kana part of the Vedas. That pure devotional service is better than the spiritual paths that ignore devotion to the Lord is confirmed in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.14.4): “My dear Lord, devotional service to You is the only auspicious path. If one gives it up simply for speculative knowledge or the understanding that these living beings are spirit soul and the material world is false, he undergoes a great deal of trouble. He only gains troublesome and inauspicious activities. His actions are like beating a husk that is already devoid of rice. One’s labour becomes fruitless.”* 7 The phrase ‘tapa-trayonmulanam’ here means ‘breaks the ignorance that is the root of suffering’. ‘Siva’ means ‘transcendental bliss’, and ‘dam’ means ‘causes to experience’. Devotional service is different from the philosophy that maintains that without attaining the four purusarthas one cannot attain liberation. Srimad Bhagavatam does not maintain that it is good to attain the difficult-to-attain results of the purusarthas. The word 'bhagavate' here means 'in the evidence presented in Srimad Bhagavatam' and 'srimat' means 'filled with the Lord's holy name and His many transcendental potencies. The affix 'matup' here adds the possessive affix 'mat' to the word 'sri'. The affix 'mat' (possessing) is employed here just as the affix 'vat' is employed in the compound word 'niloypaladi-vat'. If this interpretation is not accepted, then the word has the fault of thoughtlessness (avimrsta-vidheyamsa). 8 Srimad Bhagavatam is described in the following statement of the Garuda Purana: "The scripture named Srimad Bhagavatam has eighteen-thousand verses." 9 Srila Sridhara Svami comments (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.1.3): "The desire tree here is Srimad Bhagavatam." In some places Srimad Bhagavatam is referred to as 'Bhagavatam', without the word 'Srimad'. This is like the use of the shortened form Bhama for the name Satyabhama. 10 The cause of Srimad Bhagavatam's glory is given in the word 'maha-muni' (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.1.2). because its author is the crest jewel of the greatest of philosophers, Srimad Bhagavatam is glorious. The Sruti-sastra explains: 'He became a great philosopher and meditated on the truth.' In this way the essence of the revelation of Srimad Bhagavatam is described in these first four verses of Canto One. This revelation is again described in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 12.13.19): 'The Lord revealed Srimad Bhagavatam to the demigod Brahma." 11 Srimad Bhagavatam is the best of all scriptures. This verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.1.2) says the direct appearance of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, which is the best goal of life and the best of all knowledge described in the Vedic literature, is easily attained in Srimad Bhagavatam. This verse describes the Srimad Bhagavatam's superexcellent glory by saying: "What is the need of any other scripture or the spiritual paths described in them? As soon as one attentively and submissively hears the message of Bhagavatam, by this culture of knowledge the Supreme Lord is established within his heart." The word 'va' (or) here is like a momentary sidelong glance. The word 'susrusubhihi' here means 'they who desire to hear'. As soon as one desires to hear, the Lord is established in the heart. 12 At this point someone may object: 'Is it not so that everyone hears Srimad Bhagavatam?" The answer is given in this verse (1.1.2) in the word 'krtibhih' which means 'by the pious men'. By they who have not performed pious deeds, but simply desire to hear, the Lord is not established in the heart. That is the meaning. What is the use of spiritual paths not free from material desires, even up to liberation, the path of superficial performance of rituals to worship the Lord, meditation on impersonal Brahman and other spiritual paths mentioned and not mentioned here? How glorious are they? That is the meaning here. For they who engage in sadhana-bhakti (devotional service in practice) the Lord is at once established in the heart. It is they who always desire to hear Srimad Bhagavatam. Because it attracts the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and thus contains the most confidential secret of the three parts of the Vedas, Srimad Bhagavatam is the best of all scriptures. In this way three lines of this verse (1.1.2) have been explained. The conclusion is that everyone should hear Srimad Bhagavatam.

Anuccheda 96

1 Srila Sukadeva Gosvami met the Supreme Personality of Godhead in his heart. For this reason the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in the four central verses (1.9.30-33) of Srimad Bhagavatam. Sukadeva Gosvami taught Srimad Bhagavatam based on his own personal knowledge and realisation. Because the demigod Brahma was a great devotee, the Supreme Lord personally taught him the four most important verses of His own scripture, which bears the name Srimad Bhagavatam. The Lord said (Srimad Bhagavatam (2.9.30): 2 “Knowledge about Me as described in the scriptures is very confidential, and it has to be realised in conjunction with devotional service. The necessary paraphernalia for that process is being explained by Me. You may take it up very carefully.”* 3 In this verse the Lord says: “Please accept this transcendental Vedic knowledge I, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, am speaking to you. Others do not know this knowledge.” The word ‘parama-guhyam’ here means “This knowledge is most confidential than the knowledge of impersonal Brahman.” That this is so is confirmed in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 6.14.5): “O great sage, among many millions who are liberated and perfect in knowledge of liberation, one may be a devotee of Lord Narayana, or Krsna. Such devotees, who are fully peaceful, are extremely rare.”* 4 The Lord says: ‘Please accept this spiritual knowledge based on direct perception.’ The Lord then says that this knowledge is very confidential. That means this knowledge will eventually reveal prema-bhakti (devotional service in pure love of God). The Lord then says: ‘Please also accept the paraphernalia of this knowledge.' When the obstacles of offenses are present, this confidential knowledge will not be manifest immediately. The Lord therefore says: 'Please accept this paraphernalia to assist in understanding this knowledge.' That paraphernalia is the process of devotional service, which begins with hearing (about Krsna). In this sentence the word 'tad-angam' modifies 'sa-rahasyam'. These words are like two friends that help each other. 5 Next the Lord gives a blessing so this jnana (knowledge) and rahasya (confidential paraphernalia) may be manifested (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.9.31): "All of Me, namely My actual eternal form and My transcendental existence, colour, qualities and activities - let all be awakened within you by factual realisation, out of My causeless mercy,"* 6 In this verse 'yavan' means 'eternal form' and 'yatha-bhavah' means 'transcendental existence'. The Lord here says 'I am like this'. His forms include His dark complexioned form of Syamasundara and His four-armed Visnu forms. His qualities begin with His love for His devotees. His activities are His transcendental pastimes. This is the meaning of the words 'yad-rupa-guna-karmakah aham'. The Lord here says: 'Let all these be awakened within you by factual realisation, out of My causeless mercy." Lord Krsna refers to these four verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.9.30-33) in this instruction to Uddhava (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.4.13): "O Uddhava, in the lotus millennium in the days of yore, at the beginning of the creation, I spoke unto Brahma, who is situated on the lotus that grows out of My navel, about My transcendental glories, which the great sages describe as Srimad Bhagavatam."* 7 The words 'vijnana' here means 'with the truth of My transcendental forms and qualities.' The Lord here gives a blessing that this knowledge may become manifest. Out of love (for His devotee, the Lord gives the blessing that) the confidential truth of His blissful nature may be directly seen (by Brahma). 8 The first two of these four verses mention jnana and vijnana, which are further described in the next two verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.9.32-33). Jnana is described in the following verse, where the Lord says (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.9.32): 9 "Brahma, it is I, the Personality of Godhead, who was existing before the creation, when there was nothing but Myself. Nor was there the material nature, the cause of this creation. That which you see now is also I, the Personality of Godhead, and after annihilation what remains will also be I, the Personality of Godhead."* 10 Here the word 'aham' (I) means the form of the Lord, not the featureless Brahman, because Brahman cannot be perceived by the senses. This verse is like the famous statement (Chandogya Upanisad 6.8.7) 'tat tvam asi' (You are that). The Lord here says: 'After the time when the material universe is annihilated, I in My handsome transcendental form, will remain." 11 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead exists before and after the manifestation of the material universes is confirmed by the following quotes: "Lord Vasudeva existed before the material world was created, when there was no Brahma and no Siva." Maha-Narayana Upanisad "In the beginning was only Narayana. There was no Brahma and no Siva." Maha-Narayana

Upanisad “The Personality of Godhead, the master of all living entities, existed prior to the creation as one without a second. It is by His will only that creation is made possible and again everything merges in Him. This Supreme Self is symptomised by different names.”* Srimad Bhagavatam 3.5.23 12 As in the sentence ‘The king goes’ the word ‘king’ may also mean ‘the king’s messenger’ or ‘the king’s soldiers’, so the word ‘aham’ (I) here does not only mean the Lord but also means the Lord’s abode of Vaikuntha, the Lord’s associates, and everything else in direct relation with the Lord. In this way the meaning should be understood. The Lord is again described in the following question of King Pariksit (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.8.10): 13 “Please also explain the Personality of Godhead, who lies in every heart as the Supersoul and as the Lord of all energies, but is untouched by His external energy.”* 14 Vidura asks a similar question (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.7.37): “Please describe how many dissolutions there are for the elements of material nature and who survives after the dissolutions to serve the Lord while He is asleep.”* 15 In the Kasi-khanda, Sri Dhruva-carita, it is said: “Because the Lord’s devotees do not perish when the material cosmos is destroyed, the all-pervading, eternal Supreme Personality of Godhead also never perishes.” 16 In this verse the words ‘aham eva’ refute the idea that the Supreme is formless and impersonal, and the words ‘asam eva’ refute the idea that the Supreme is beyond the power of thought. This is confirmed by the words ‘yad-rupa-guna-karmakah’. Aside from the activities of material creation, the demigod Brahma and other outsiders know nothing of the Lord’s real activities. They do not know of the Lord’s internal, spiritual pastimes. As a king has nothing that he must perform as his duty, so the Supreme Lord does not have to sleep, eat, or do any other thing. The verb ‘as’ (asam) may also mean ‘to go’, ‘to shine’, or ‘to accept’. When ‘as’ is interpreted to mean ‘shine’, this verse may mean that the Lord says to Brahma: ‘I am splendidly manifest before you as you gaze on My transcendental features.’ Interpreted in this way, these words refute the idea that the Supreme has no form. In his discussion of form and formlessness in relation to Lord Visnu, Srila Bopadeva Gosvami explains in his Muktaphala-tika commentary on this verse: “It is not that the forms of the Lord cannot be all pervading. The Lord’s form does not disappear into nothingness simply because He is simultaneously everywhere.” The Aitareya Upanisad (1.1.1) also explains: “Before the material world was created the Supreme Person existed.” From this it may be understood that because the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead existed before the material creation, the knowledge of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the highest truth. 17 At this point someone may object: ‘Is it not so the Sruti-sastra says that before the material creation the Brahman, which has no qualities, existed?’ To this objection the Lord answers: ‘nanyad yat sat-asat-param’. This means: ‘Before the creation there was nothing but Myself. Nor was there the material nature, the cause of this creation.’ In this statement the word ‘asat’ means ‘effect’ and ‘sat’ means ‘cause’. Because the Lord says that ‘there was nothing but

Myself', He says 'the impersonal Brahman, which is above the cause and effect of this world, is not different from Me.' He says: 'Because some scriptures cannot understand my personal form and qualities, I am reflected in them in my impersonal aspect.' In the material world, where spiritual variety is not understood, I appear as the undifferentiated Brahman, but in the spiritual world of Vaikuntha I appear as the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In this way these two aspects of the Supreme are described in the scriptures. The truth about the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described by Lord Krsna in Bhagavad-gita (14.27) in the words: 'I am the basis of the impersonal Brahma.' In this way the Lord says that knowledge of Him is 'very confidential.' 18 At this point someone may object: 'O Supreme Personality of Godhead, is it not so that when the material universe is no longer manifest, You also no longer exist?' The Lord answers (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.9.31): 'After annihilation what remains will also be I, the Personality of Godhead."* In the material universes the Supreme Personality of Godhead manifests His form of the Supersoul, and in the spiritual world of Vaikuntha He manifests His forms of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. That the Lord is not affected by the destruction of the material universes is confirmed in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.3.35): "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the cause of the creation, maintenance and destruction of the material universes. No one is the cause of Him." 19 At this point someone may object: 'O Lord, the pottery, clothing, and other forms seen in the material universe are not Your forms, for they are not all powerful.' Thinking someone might raise this objection, the Lord said: 'I am the material universe. Because it is not different from Me, it is My very self." It is also said (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.7.50): 20 "My dear son, I have no explained in brief the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is the creator of the manifested worlds. Without Him, Hari, the Lord, there are no other causes of the phenomenal and nominal existences."* 21 In this way the truth of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is explained. The Himself says (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.9.33): "After annihilation of the material universe what remains will also be I, the Personality of Godhead." About the Supreme Personality of Godhead the scriptures declare: 'O Lord, because You alone remain (sesa) when the material universes are destroyed, You bear the name Sesa.' The Lord teaches that He is present in all places and at all times. He says (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.33) 'I, the Personality of Godhead was existing before the creation, when there was nothing but Myself.' He again says (Bhagavad-gita 14.27): 'I am the basis of the impersonal Brahman." In Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.32 the word 'yad-bhavah' indicates that all forms are limbs of the Lord's own form, and the word 'rupa' in that verse indicates that the Lord has unlimited wonderful transcendental forms different from material forms. The word 'guna' in that verse indicates that the Lord is the shelter of everything and He has unlimited transcendental qualities different from material qualities. The word 'karmakah' in that verse indicates that the Lord is the shelter of many extraordinary activities, such as His creation, maintenance, and destruction of the material universes. 22 In the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.34), in order to teach the truth that His forms and qualities are different from matter, the Lord describes the qualities of the illusory energy (maya). He says: “O Brahma, whatever appears to be of any value, if it is without relation to Me, has no reality. Know it as My illusory energy, that reflection which appears to be in darkness.”* The summary explanation of this verse is: “I am the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Anything present before the eyes that is not Me has no reality. Anything without relation to Me has no reality. Know it as the illusory energy of Me, the Supreme Personality of Godhead.” 23 The word ‘yathabhasah’ gives the example of a reflection. Darkness is here compared to a reflection. Darkness may mean either that there is no light in a certain place although light shines in other places, or darkness may also mean that light does shine in a certain place although the beholder has no eyes to see it. The word ‘vidyat’ (know), although in the third- person, expresses the meaning of the second-person. This instruction, therefore, is intended for others. The Lord says: “With the power I give, you will be able to see and understand Me. Transcending material vision, you will directly see and understand Me, whose forms and qualities are transcendental. By turning from the illusion of matter, one may understand Me. The conclusion is that My transcendental form and qualities cannot be seen or understood by a person in the thrall of material illusion.” For this reason material illusion should be given up. Without giving up material illusion it is not possible to love the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

1 In the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.35) the Lord explains the secret of love for Him: “O Brahma, please know that the universal elements enter into the cosmos and at the same time do not enter into the cosmos; similarly, I Myself also exist within everything created, and at the same time I am outside of everything.”* 2 This verse means: ‘The universal elements do not enter the cosmos, that is to say they remain outside, and at the same time they do enter, that is to say they stay within. In the same way I do not enter the material cosmos because I stay in Vaikuntha, which is beyond the material sphere, and at the same time I do enter the cosmos because I stay in the hearts of the virtuous and surrendered devotees.’ A certain part of the material elements enters and another part does not enter the cosmos. In the same, a partial expansion of the Lord enters, and another feature of the Lord does not enter the material world. That is the example here. In these words the secret of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, which is attained by the self-controlled, is hinted. 3 The Lord’s remaining in the spiritual world is described in Brahma-samhita (37): “I worship Govinda, the primeval Lord, who resides in His own realm, Goloka, with Radha, who resembles His own spiritual figure and who embodies His ecstatic potency (hladini). Their companions are Her confidantes, who embody extensions of Her bodily form and who are embued and permeated with ever-blissful spiritual rasa.”* 4 The Lord’s entrance in the devotees’ hearts is described in these words (Brahma-samhita 38): “I worship the primeval Lord, Govinda, who is always seen by the devotee whose eyes are anointed with the pulp of love. He is seen in His eternal form of Syamasundara, situated within the heart of the devotee.”* 5 The Lord’s form is filled with inconceivable transcendental qualities. The ointment here is the ointment of love. The Lord appears before a person whose eyes are filled with devotion, having been anointed with that ointment. That is the meaning. 6 The Lord again describes this in Bhagavad-gita (9.29): “But whoever renders service unto Me in devotion is a friend, is in Me, and I am also a friend to him.”* 7 In this verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.35) the Lord says: “As the material elements are simultaneously within and without the cosmos, so I am simultaneously within the devotees’ thoughts, and also outside the devotees, manifest before their senses. Because the devotees dedicate everything to Me, I appear before them in My form filled with bliss and love. That is My secret. The demigod Brahma also describes this (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.6.34): 8 “O Narada, because I have caught hold of the lotus feet of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Hari, with great zeal, whatever I say has never proved to have been false. Nor is the progress of my mind ever deterred. Nor are my senses ever degraded by temporary attachment to matter.”* 9 Although the interpretations of this statement (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.35) may be given, the meaning here is clear because this statement follows the four important statements of the Lord (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.31-34). Other interpretations are also refuted by the words ‘na tesu’ here. In this way the great secret is explained. As a cintamani jewels is hidden in a jewellery case, so materialistic interpretations hide this secret from the wicked and indifferent. 10 The Lord Himself says (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.21.35): “The wise tell My secret. This secret is very dear to Me.” 11 This great secret is explained in many places in Vedic literature. The greatness of this secret is described in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 5.6.18): “Those engaged in getting the Lord’s favour attain liberation from the Lord very easily, but He does not very easily give the opportunity to render direct service unto Him.”* 12 The Supreme Personality of Godhead personally told this secret to the two great devotees Arjuna and Uddhava in these words: “Because you are My very dear friend, I am speaking to you My supreme instruction, the most confidential knowledge of all. Hear this from Me, for it is for your benefit.”* Bhagavad-gita 18.64 “I will now tell you the most confidential knowledge.” Srimad Bhagavatam 11.11.49 13 Brahma revealed this secret to Narada in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.7.51-52): “O Narada, this science of God, Srimad Bhagavatam, was spoken to me in summary by the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and it was spoken as the accumulation of His diverse potencies. Please expand this science yourself.* 14 “Please describe the science of Godhead with determination and in a manner by which it will be quite possible for the human being to develop transcendental devotional service unto the Personality of Godhead Hari, the Supersoul of every living being and the summum bonum source of all energies.”* 15 Srila Sridhara

Svami eloquent explains that the word ‘rahasyam’ (secret) here (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.31) refers to pure devotional service. How is this secret, described in the passage beginning Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.31 understood? The Supreme Personality of Godhead teaches the method of understanding it in the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.36): 16 “A person who is searching after the Supreme Absolute Truth, the Personality of Godhead, must certainly search for it up to this, in all circumstances, in all space and time, and both directly and indirectly.”* 17 In this verse the word ‘atmanah’ means ‘of Me, the Supreme Personality of Godhead’, ‘tattva-jijnasuna’ means ‘desiring to understand the secret of pure love’, ‘jijnasyam’ means ‘may be learned from the spiritual master’, and ‘anvaya-vyatirekabhyam’ means ‘with the instruction to do certain acts and refrain from certain acts’. This should be done in all circumstances and all space and time. 18 This is described in Srimad Bhagavatam (2.2.33): “For those who are wandering in the material universe, there is no more auspicious means of deliverance than what is aimed at in the direct devotional service of Lord Krsna.”* 19 Actions to be done and to be avoided are described in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.2.36): “O King, it is therefore essential that every human being hear about, glorify and remember the Supreme Lord, the Personality of Godhead, always and everywhere.”* 20 This should be done, as said in Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.36 ‘in all circumstances, and in all time and space’. In this way the Supreme Personality of Godhead teaches about jnana, vijnana, rahasya, and tad-anga in these four verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.31-34). In the beginning of this chapter it is also said (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.9): “The Personality of Godhead, being thus very much satisfied with the penance of Lord Brahma, was pleased to manifest His personal abode, Vaikuntha, the supreme planet above all others. This transcendental abode of the Lord is adored by all self-realised persons freed from all kinds of miseries and fear of illusory existence.”* It is then said (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.14): “Lord Brahma saw in the Vaikuntha planets the Personality of Godhead, who is the Lord of the entire devotee community, the Lord of the goddess of fortune, the Lord of all sacrifices, and the Lord of the universe, and who is served by the foremost servitors like Nanda, Sunanda, Prabala and Arhana, His immediate associates.”* In these words of Srimad Bhagavatam, as well as the words of Gopala-tapani Upanisad, Lord Krsna is described as the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Lord Krsna is never described as an incarnation of Lord Narayana, Lord Garbhodakasayi Visnu, or the purusa-avataras. Because it describes Lord Krsna, the speaker of these four verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.9.31-34) as the Supreme Personality of Godhead (Bhagavan), this Maha-Purana is called Srimad Bhagavatam. 21 That Lord Krsna is the original speaker of Srimad Bhagavatam is confirmed in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 12.13.19): “I meditate upon that pure and spotless supreme Absolute Truth, who is free from suffering and death and who in the beginning personally revealed this incomparable torchlight of knowledge to Brahma. Brahma then spoke it to the sage Narada, who narrated it to Krsna-dvaipayana Vyasa. Srila Vyasa revealed this Srimad Bhagavatam to the greatest of sages, Sukadeva Gosvami and Sukadeva mercifully spoke it to Maharaja Pariksit." The word 'para' in this verse indicates that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the original speaker of the Bhagavatam. That Lord Krsna is the original Supreme Personality of Godhead is hinted in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.6.42): "Karanarnavasayi Visnu is the first incarnation of the Supreme Lord, and He is the master of eternal time, space, cause and effects, mind, the elements, the material ego, the modes of nature, the senses, the universal form of the Lord, Garbhodakasayi Visnu, and the sum total of all living beings, both moving and unmoving."* This statement indicates that Lord Krsna is different (because He is the origin of all incarnations) from the various incarnations of god. 22 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the original speaker of Srimad Bhagavatam is also confirmed by these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 12.13.10): "It was to Lord Brahma that the Supreme Personality of Godhead first revealed the Srimad Bhagavatam in full. At the time, Brahma, frightened by material existence, was sitting on the lotus flower that had grown from the Lord's navel." 23 The word Bhagavan (Supreme Personality of Godhead) is used in this verse. It was Bhagavan who spoke to Brahma as he sat on the lotus flower grown from Lord Narayana's navel. It was also Bhagavan who revealed the world of Vaikuntha in the passage from Second Canto (2.9.9 and 2.9.14, quoted in text 20).

1 The Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in all the Vedas. This is confirmed in the following words of the Catur-veda-sikha: “By all the Vedas the Supreme Personality of Godhead is to be known. The Vedas describe no one else. A person who aspires after liberation should study the Vedas, reflect on their words, and try to understand Him.” 2 This is again confirmed in these words: “The demigods, the sages who desire liberation, and the brahmavadis all meditate on the Supreme Personality of Godhead.” Sri Nrsimha-tapani Upanisad 2.4 “All the Vedas meditate on the feet of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and all austerities chant His glories.” Katha Upanisad 1.2.15 “Let me approach the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the great Supersoul who sees everything. They who are ignorant of the Vedas cannot understand Him.” Sruti-sastra “I ask about the Supreme Person, who is described in the Upanisads.” Sruti-sastra “By all the Vedas, I am to be known. Indeed, I am the compiler of the Vedanta, and I am the knower of the Vedas.”* Lord Krsna, in Bhagavad-gita 15.15 3 In the Padma Purana it is said: “In conclusion, the Supreme Personality of Godhead Visnu is described in all the Vedas.” 4 In the Skanda Purana it is said: “The Supreme Personality of Godhead is named by all names and worshipped by all the Vedas.” 5 In the Visnu Purana it is said: “We offer our respectful obeisances to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the eternal author of the Vedas.” 6 In the Brahma-tarka it is said: “In all the Vedas, Itihasas, Puranas, and Yuktika-sastras, only the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and no one else, is to be known.” 7 The Supreme Personality of Godhead describes Himself as the conclusion of the Vedas (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.21.43): “The purpose of Vedic literature is to know Me by different speculations, either by indirect understanding or by dictionary understanding.”* 8 In this verse ‘mam’ means ‘Me, the object of the Vedic sacrifices’, ‘vidhatte’ means ‘the Vedas ordain’, and ‘abhidhatte mam’ means ‘the Vedas set form Me, the form of all Deities and the creator of the sky and the other material elements.’ That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the creator of the sky is confirmed by the following words (Taittiriya Upanisad 2.1.3): “From the Supreme Personality of Godhead the sky was born.” “Vikalpyapohyate hy aham’ means ‘speculating that nothing is different from Me.”

Anuccheda 99

1 In this way it is proved that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the subject matter of the Vedas. This is confirmed in the following question of King Pariksit and the answer of Sri Sukadeva Gosvami (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.1): “Since Vedic knowledge generally deals with the subject matter of the three qualities of the material world, how then can it approach the subject matter of transcendence, which is beyond the approach of the three material modes? Since the mind is material and the vibration of words is a material sound, how can the Vedic knowledge, expressing by material sound the thoughts of the mind, approach transcendence? Description of a subject matter necessitates describing its source of emanation, its qualities, and its activities. Such description can be possible only by thinking with the material mind and by vibrating material words. Although Brahma, or Absolute Truth, has no material qualities, our power of speaking does not go beyond the material qualities. How then can Brahman, the Absolute Truth, be described by your words? I do not see how it is possible to understand transcendence from such expressions of material sound.”* 2 The meaning is that the Vedas consist of words that describe mostly the mode of nature, which begin with goodness, and the Supreme Brahman is beyond the modes of nature, which begin with goodness. For this reason the Supreme Brahman cannot be described. Because it is beyond the actions of the modes of material nature, the Supreme Brahman cannot be described. The words ‘sat’ and ‘asat’ here mean ‘cause’ and ‘effect’. Brahman is also beyond cause and effect. Sometimes words are unambiguous and have only one meaning. An example of this is the word ‘dittha’ (toy elephant). Some words have a second meaning. An example of this is the phrase ‘simho devadattah’ (the lion Devadatta), where the word ‘lion’ actually means ‘lionlike’. Sometimes words have a metaphorical meaning. An example of this is the phrase ‘gangayam ghosah’ (a cowherd village on the Ganga), where the word ‘Ganga’ does not mean ‘in the Ganga’ but ‘on the Ganga’s shore’. How is it possible for the Vedas to describe the Supreme Brahman, which has no material qualities, with words, which have so many ambiguous meanings? In the statements of the Vedic literature, which do not describe anything but the Supreme, as for example the statement of Vedanta-sutra (1.1.3) ‘The Supreme Brahman is the origin of the scriptures’ the primary, literal meaning should be accepted. In these self evident statements of the Vedas the literal meaning should be accepted. Why should the literal meaning be accepted? It should be accepted because you (Sukadeva Gosvami) are personally speaking out of great compassion. Otherwise it would not be possible to understand Brahman in the Vedas. How then would it be possible to understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is above Brahman, without your explanation? For this reason the path of the self-evident Vedas leads to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is described in this passage, which begins with Srimad Bhagavatam 10.86.59. 3 Srila Sukadeva Gosvami answered in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.2): “The sages said: The Supreme Personality of Godhead has created the mind, senses, and living force for the purpose of sense gratification in transmigration from one kind of body to another, as well as for the purpose of allowing liberation from the material conditions.” 4 In this verse the compound word beginning with ‘buddhi’ means ‘the various attributes’ and ‘jananam’ means ‘of the individual living entities’. To arrange for their sense gratification, the Supreme Personality of Godhead (prabhuh) created their intelligence, mind, senses, and living force. The individual living entities, employing their own knowledge, did not create them. By this statement the vivarta-vada (impersonalists’ theory of transformation) is refuted. The word ‘mtra’ here means ‘of the material senses’, ‘bhava’ means ‘activities that bring one another birth’, ‘atmane’ means ‘to the individual living entity, who has come to the material world to enjoy’, and ‘akalpanaya’ means ‘for liberation and freedom from material desire’. Material desire here is the four goals of economic development, material piety, sense gratification and impersonal liberation. Liberation here is the liberation where one sees everything is spirit. 5 Srimad Bhagavatam (5.19.19-20) explains: “If one’s position is ascertained by a bona fide spiritual master and one is properly trained to engage in the service of Lord Visnu according to the four social divisions (brahmana, ksatriya, vaisya and sudra) and the four spiritual divisions (brahmacari, grhastha, vanaprastha and sannyasa), one's life becomes perfect.* "After many, many births, when the results of one's pious activities mature, one gets an opportunity to associate with pure devotees. Then one is able to cut the knot of bondage to ignorance, which bound him because of varied fruitive activities. As a result of associating with devotees, one gradually renders service to Lord Vasudeva, who is transcendental, free from attachment to the material world, beyond the mind and words, and independent of everything else. That bhakti-yoga, devotional service to Lord Vasudeva, is the real path of liberation."* In this prose passage of the Fifth Canto two kinds of devotional service are described. 6 In both these processes of devotional service (following varnasrama and meeting a devotee) one becomes free from the illusions of material ignorance. The Supreme Personality of Godhead therefore creates the intelligence and senses of the conditioned souls to enable them to engage in devotional service. His sampadana-sakti potency makes all this possible. Because the three goals of economic development, material piety, and sense gratification are external and material, liberation is different from them. Liberation is part of the spiritual potency. Because it is internal and consists of spiritual knowledge and devotional service, and because it breaks the bonds of material existence, it is different from matter. This is described in Srimad Bhagavatam 2.10.6: "Liberation is the permanent situation of the living entity after he gives up the changeable gross and subtle material bodies."* When the living entities are averse to the Lord's devotional service, then their intelligence and senses are under the thrall of the material ignorance potency. When the living entities are under the thrall of the modes of nature the Lord is not manifest, but when they are free from the modes He appears before them. In this way this verse is explained. 7 Srila Sukadeva Gosvami concludes his answer by says (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.49): "Thus I have replied to the question You submitted to me, O king, about how the mind can have access to the Absolute Truth, which is ineffable and devoid of qualities." 8 In this way the spiritual potency reveals the Lord's non material, blissful, forms and qualities. Therefore the Lord can be understood and expressed in words. Later on it will also be proved that the Vedas can describe the Lord's non material forms and qualities. Therefore it is proved that the words of the individual spirit souls can described the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is explained in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.5.1): "On the other hand, that literature which is full of descriptions of the transcendental glories of the name, fame, forms, pastimes, etc. of the unlimited Supreme Lord is a different creation, full of transcendental words directed toward bringing about a revolution in the impious lives of this world's misdirected civilisation. Such transcendental literatures, even though imperfectly composed, are heard, sung, and accepted by purified men who are thoroughly honest."* In addition to this it is said that the Vedas are created by the breathing of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. (Thus there are two kinds of description of the Supreme Personality of Godhead: that spoken by the individual living entities, and that spoken by the Supreme Lord Himself.) What more need be said? The Vedas can directly describe the Supreme. 9 In Srimad Bhagavatam (10.87.14) it will be said: “O Lord, the Vedas understand You and You enjoy pastimes with Your eternal potency.” In the Twelfth Canto (Srimad Bhagavatam 12.6.41), it will be said about the sacred syllable om: 10 “This omkara, ultimately non material and imperceptible, is heard by the Supersoul without His possessing material ears or any other material senses. The entire expanse of Vedic sound is elaborated from omkara, which appears from the soul, within the sky of the heart. It is the direct designation of the self-originating Absolute truth, the Supersoul, and is the secret essence and eternal seed of all Vedic hymns.” 11 In the Sruti-sastra also it is said: “Om is the name of the Supreme.” 12 “Nedistham’ here means ‘without concealing any of His characteristics”. The king’s question here is: ‘How is it possible for the Vedas to directly describe the Supreme? Please tell.” The idea is that words are not able to describe the Supreme. This idea is refuted in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.41): “O Lord, because You are limitless even the great demigods cannot find where You end. Even You cannot find where You end. Within You the universes move as specks of dust tossed by the wind. Rejecting everything that is not You, the Vedas become fruitful when they find You.” External, superficial readers think the Vedas describe economic development, material piety, and sense gratification. The conclusion of the Vedas is not these external things, but rather the internal, esoteric description of the Supreme. 13 The Vedas are the Supreme Personality of Godhead’s breath, manifested by the pastime of His compassion on the wretched living entities outside the eternal spiritual reality. First, to create faith in the unseen and unknown (spiritual reality) the Vedas great easily visible goals, such as the attainment of a son, to the living entities striving for such things. From this, faith (in the Vedas’ ability to grant benedictions) is created. With that faith the Vedas show the temporary nature of the material world, create a desire to go to the very wonderful higher worlds of Svargaloka, and give the living entities the Agnistoma-yajna to attain that goal. By again and again practicing religious rituals, the living entity becomes attracted to religion, and with this attraction he becomes pure in heart. He becomes wise and, knowing that his material situation is temporary, becomes tormented with fear of the cycle of repeated birth and death. Then the Vedas give him the desire to attain the bliss of impersonal liberation. From the bliss of impersonal liberation eventually the spiritual form of the Supreme Truth, the Personality of Godhead, appears. 14 This ultimate plan of the Vedas is described in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.2.9-10): “All occupational engagements are certainly meant for ultimate liberation. They should never be performed for material gain. Furthermore, according to sages, one who is engaged in the ultimate occupational service should never use material gain to cultivate sense gratification.* 15 “Life’s desires should never be directed toward sense gratification. One should desire only a healthy life, or self-preservation, since a human being is meant for inquiry about the Absolute Truth. Nothing else should be the goal of one's works."* 16 To the extent the intelligence and senses are situated in the internal spiritual reality, to that extent they are able to understand the Supreme Truth manifest by the spiritual potency. In this way they are able to cross over the Vedic instructions in relation to the three modes of material nature are able to understand the Supreme Truth beyond the modes. In the Twelfth Canto (Srimad Bhagavatam 12.6.39) it is said in relation to the sacred syllable om: 17 "From that the sacred syllable omkara, independent, with unmanifest potencies, and the form of Brahman, Paramatma, and Bhagavan, was manifest." 18 The Supreme Truth is manifest in two ways: in the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and in the form of the impersonal Brahman. The spiritual potency is also manifest in two ways: in the form of self-manifest devotional service and in the form of spiritual knowledge. The devotional service portions of the Vedas lead to the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the knowledge portions of the Vedas lead to the impersonal Brahman. This conclusion is found in the Itihasas.

1 Srimad Bhagavatam (10.87.12) explains: “Sanandana said: After the dissolution of the whole cosmic manifestation, the entire energy and the whole creation in its nucleus form enters into the body of Garbhodakasayi Visnu. The Lord at that time remains asleep for a long, long time, and where there is again necessity of creation, the Vedas personified assemble around the Lord and begin to glorify Him, describing His wonderful transcendental pastimes."* 2 At the time of cosmic annihilation the Lord withdraws (apiya) the universe He had created and lies down to rest with His potencies. Making the material nature, the purusa-avatara, and the portion of His portions all one with Himself, He closes His eyes. When the time of cosmic annihilation is almost over the Vedas awaken the Lord with prayers describing His transcendental qualities. The Lord here is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. He is not a purusa-avatara expansion. 3 That the purusa-avatara also enters the Lord is described in the Third Canto (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.5.23): "The Personality of Godhead, the master of all living entities, existed prior to the creation as one without a second. It is by His will only that creation is made possible and again everything merges in Him. This Supreme Self is symptomised by different names."* 4 Continuing the description in text 1, the Srimad Bhagavatam (1.87.13) gives an example: "Then the Vedas glorify the Lord. It is exactly like a king. When he is asleep in the morning, the appointed reciters come around his bedroom and begin to sing of his chivalrous activities, and while hearing of his glorious activities, the king gradually awakens."* 5 The example here is a powerful king, not an impersonal quality less something, glorified with eloquent prayers. That is the meaning of the words "It is exactly like a king. When he is asleep…" At night the king enjoys pastimes with his queens. He ignores all external duties and stays with His intimate associates in the inner part of his palace. Later, the poets awaken him by reciting many prayers glorifying his prowess. The Supreme Personality of Godhead is compared to this king. Ignoring all in relation to the material universes, He enjoys pastimes with His associates in His own abode hidden from material eyes. The Lord's associates (anujivinah) are they who know the Lord's heart. 6 In this passage the Vedas reveal the truth of the Lord's form, which is directly seen by devotional service, service that allows one to directly see the Lord and also grants transcendental knowledge and a host of transcendental virtues. The Personified Vedas say (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.14): 7 "O unconquerable, You are the Supreme Personality. No one is equal to You or greater than You. No one can be more glorious in his activities. All glories unto You! All glories unto You! By Your own transcendental nature You fully possess all six opulences. As such, You are able to deliver all conditioned souls from the clutches of maya. O Lord, we fervently pray that You kindly do so. All the living entities, being Your parts and parcels, are naturally joyful, eternal, and full of knowledge, but due to their own faults they try to imitate You by trying to become the supreme enjoyer; thus they disobey Your supremacy and become offenders. And because of their offenses, Your material energy has taken charge of them; thus, their transcendental qualities of joyfulness, bliss, and wisdom have been covered by the clouds of the three material qualities. This cosmic manifestation, made of the three material qualities, is just like a prison house for the conditioned souls. The conditioned souls are struggling very hard to escape from material bondage, and according to their different conditions of life they have been given different types of engagement. But all engagements are based on Your knowledge. Pious activities can be executed only when inspired by Your mercy, therefore, without taking shelter at Your lotus feet one cannot surpass the influence of material energy. Actually, we, as personified Vedic knowledge, are always engaged in Your service to help the conditioned soul understand You."* 8 "Ajita" here means 'O unconquerable one' and 'jaya jaya' means 'Please reveal Your glory'. 'Jaya' is said twice out of respect. 'Ajita' here is in the vocative case. 9 It is said (Srimad Bhagavatam 6.2.10): "Simply by chanting the holy name of Lord Visnu, such sinful persons may attract the attention of the Supreme Lord, who therefore considers, 'Because this man has chanted My holy name, My duty is to give him protection.'"* 10 From this it may be understood that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is personally present, face-to-face, in the sound of His holy name. He is His name, just as He is His transcendental form. He is not present face-to-face in anything that is different from Him. The Sruti-sastra explains that fear, hatred, and other faults and vices present in the Lord's form are only symbolic. They are not like material fear and hatred. This has already been proved in the Sruti. The form of the Lord appears on the eyes and the holy name of the Lord appears on the voice. The Lord's form and name are the same direct manifestation of the Lord, although appearing in different ways. That more need be said? Using sanketa, rudha, and other literary devices, the Vedas have in many ways explained that the Lord is not different from His name. The Vedas here say: "O Lord, please reveal Your glories (jaya jaya)!" In this way, without recourse to any indirect literary devices, the Personified Vedas directly say that the Lord's glories and qualities are the most exalted. This is described in the Sruti-sastra in these words: "O Lord, Your glories are so great even You do not fully understand them." Sruti-sastra "No one is equal to or greater than the Supreme Personality of Godhead." Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.8 11 The Personified Vedas here say 'jaya jaya!' so that the Lord will reveal His devotional service. They do that because the Lord personally appears when there is devotional service. Hearing the Vedas' words 'jaya jaya!', the Supreme Personality of Godhead may ask: 'Which one of My glories shall I manifest?' To this question the Personified Vedas reply: 'ajam jahi', which means 'Please manifest the glory of Your gift of devotional service, which casts away the influence of maya.' 12 Then the Supreme Personality of Godhead may protest: 'My potency of knowledge and My potency of ignorance are both called 'maya', so it 'maya' is cast out, then transcendental knowledge will be destroyed.' The Personified Vedas then reply: 'This 'maya' is 'dosa-grbhita-guna'.' 'Dosa' here is the fault of ignorance, which makes the living entities forget the Supreme Personality of Godhead. 'Grbhita' means 'accepted' and 'guna' means 'the knowledge that makes the living entities remember the Supreme Personality of Godhead.' This means 'O Lord, when You enter the living entity ignorance is cast out. No matter where, when, how, or whom, ignorance flees from the living entity. Therefore, O Lord, please uproot ignorance and give the living entities pure devotion for Your lotus feet.' This means that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is Himself beyond the influence of the potency of ignorance. He is eternal, full of knowledge, and full of bliss. Rejecting everything that is not Him, the Vedas describe (caranti) the Supreme Personality of Godhead. 13 That the Lord is above the influence of matter is confirmed in the following words of the Vedas: "One should know that although maya (illusion) is false or temporary, the background of maya is the supreme magician, the Personality of Godhead, who is Mahesvara, the Supreme Controller."* Svetasvatara Upanisad 4.10 "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is beyond the influence of the unborn potency of illusion." Svetasvatara Upanisad 4.5 "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the master of everything. He is the ruler of all," Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad 5.6.1 "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is not material. He is not material." Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad 4.2.21 14 At this point the Supreme Personality of Godhead may protest: 'Is it not so that by praying for the destruction of maya you want to destroy what is one of My opulences?" To answer this the Personified Vedas say: 'O Lord, You fully possess all six opulences (tvam asi yad atmana samavaruddha-samasta-bhagah).' This means 'O Lord, You are the master of a great multitude of opulences in the spiritual world, which is three quarters of all existence. What is the use of this tiny, insignificant opulence of material illusion?" 15 In his commentary on Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.38, Sridhara Svami explains: "O Supreme Personality of Godhead, O master of multitudes of kamadhenu cows and the potencies of transcendental bliss and knowledge, what do You have to do with the unborn potency of material illusion? You have nothing to do with the eight material opulences limited by time, place and other material boundaries. Your opulences are spiritual and free of all limits." 16 Here (in Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.14) the word 'atma' means 'Your form' and 'bhaga' means 'Your qualities.' By using these words for form and qualities the Personified Vedas are able, by using the traditional meaning (rudhi) of words, to describe the Supreme Personality of Godhead. 17 The Sruti-sastra describes the Lord and His potencies: "The Lord is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. His potencies are manifest from Him." Sruti-sastra "The Supreme Personality of Godhead has multifarious potencies." Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.8 18 In this way all the Vedas describe the Lord's potencies. In this verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.14) the word 'aga' means 'the stationary living entities', 'jagat' means 'the moving living entities', and 'okasam' means 'the material bodies that are their homes'. 'Akhila-sakty-avabodhaka' means 'O Lord who awakens all Your potencies, which are the individual living entities (jivas)' and is in the vocative case. This means: 'O Lord, by Your glance manifesting the wonderful potencies of maya, You are like an ocean filled with the waves of all Your potencies." At this point the Lord may protest: 'Is it not so that if the maya potency is destroyed then the potency that is the individual living entities (jivas) will inevitably also be destroyed?" To this the Personified Vedas reply: This is not so because 'aga-jagad-oksam akhila-sakty-avabodhaka' (O Lord, You awaken the moving and stationary living entities). On the contrary, your potency (that eclipses maya) fills the living entities with bliss. In this way the Personified Vedas describe the individual living entities as tatastha-sakti (the Lord's marginal potency). 19 The relationship of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the individual living entity is described in the Sruti-sastra: "Who can breathe and who can live if the supreme bliss, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, does not stay in the sky of his heart?" Taittiriya Upanisad 2.7.1 "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the life-breath of everyone's life." Kena Upanisad 1.2 "Everything that exists is the reflection of the Supreme Personality of Godhead." Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.8 This means that the stars and other celestial lights are reflected from the light of the Supreme. The relationship of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the individual living entity is also described in these words (Svetasvatara Upanisad): "Only to those great souls who have implicit faith in both the Lord and the spiritual master are the imports of Vedic knowledge automatically revealed."* 20 At this point the Supreme Personality of Godhead may protest: 'How do you Vedas know that I have no duty to perform for the unborn maya potency, and how do you know that I am eternal and full of knowledge and bliss and by My own potencies are full of all opulences?' The Vedas answer: "Sometimes we see You when, to create, maintain, and destroy the material worlds, in Your form of the purusa-avatara You enjoy pastimes with the unborn maya potency, or when by the means of Your internal potency You manifest Your personal opulences full of the nectar of eternity, knowledge and bliss, or when You appear as the words to us Vedas or as the Supreme worshipable Lord. In this way we Vedas know everything about You." In this verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.14) the Supreme Personality of Godhead is in the possessive case. 21 The Vedas are divided into two parts, one part dealing with the realm of the three modes of material nature, and the other part dealing with what is beyond the three modes of material nature. The part dealing with the three modes of material nature is in turn again divided into three parts. In the first of these parts the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described as being on the border between the spiritual and material worlds. An example of this part is the statement: "From the Supreme Personality of Godhead the material elements were born." Taittiriya Upanisad 3.1.1 In the second of these parts the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described as glorious because He is the controller of all within the realm of the three modes of material nature. An example of this part is the statement: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the king of all within the realm of the three modes." Sruti-sastra In the third of these parts the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described as the teacher that shows how to transcend the realm of the three modes of material nature. 22 The second part (describing what is beyond the three modes of material nature) of the Vedas may be divided into two parts. The first part states that the Supreme is different from the realm of the three modes and the second part states that the Supreme is identical with the realm of the three modes. An example of the first part is the statement: “The Supreme is not large and not small. It is not this. It is not that.” Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad 3.8.8. Examples of the second part are the statements: “The entire world is Brahman.” Chandogya Upanisad 3.14.1 “You are that.” Chandogya Upanisad 6.8.7 Of the last two quotes the first says that everything is Brahman because everything was born from Brahman. Thus the changeless Supreme Brahman is the shelter of everything and everything is part of it, each part being pure Brahman (spirit). In the second quote the word ‘tvam’ (you) means ‘the individual living entity, who is the potency of the spiritual form of the Supreme’ and ‘tat’ (that) means ‘the Supreme Brahman’. Without understanding the real meaning of the word ‘tat’ the meaning of ‘tvam’ will not be understood. Both ‘tat’ (the Supreme Brahman) and ‘tvam’ (the individual living entity) are by nature beyond the realm of the three material modes. Here it is clear that the Supreme is the Supreme Personality of Godhead (Bhagavan). It is not at all clear that the Supreme is the impersonal Brahman. In this way the words ‘ajaya...carato nucaret’ in Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.14 are explained. 23 The living entities who have transcended the realm of the three modes are divided into two groups: they who are devoted to the impersonal Brahman and they who are devoted to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The impersonal Brahman is described in these words (Taittiriya Upanisad (3.6): “Brahman is full of bliss.” 24 The Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in these words (Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.8): “He does not possess bodily form like that of an ordinary living entity. There is no difference between His body and His soul. He is absolute. All His senses are transcendental. Any one of His senses can perform the action of any other sense. Therefore, no one is greater than Him or equal to Him. His potencies are multifarious, and thus His deeds are automatically performed as a natural sequence.”* 25 In this way the statement ‘atmana carato nucaren nigamah’ is explained. In this way it is proved that the Vedas describe the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In the parts of the Vedas that describe what is beyond the three modes of material nature He is directly described. In the other parts He is described indirectly. To prove that He is not material. His various transcendental qualities are described. Leaving behind all partial descriptions, the Vedas directly describe the transcendental form and qualities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. That is the conclusive explanation of the indirect description of the Lord. 26 In conclusion, O Lord, the Vedas become fruitful in the description of You. This is described in the following verses quoted in the commentary of Sripada Madhvacarya: “Neither eyes, nor ears, nor logic teach of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Only the Sruti and Smrti sastras teach of Him.” Sruti-sastra “The Supreme Person is described in the Upanisads: Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad 3.9.26

1 In this way it has been proved that the Vedas describe the Supreme Brahman. That the final conclusion of the Vedas is that the Supreme is the Personality of Godhead is described in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.15): “O Lord, those who aspire for liberation from this material world must therefore worship You, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the ultimate cause of all causes. You are just like the total mass of earth, from which varieties of earthly pots are manufactured. The pots are made of earthly clay, they rest on the earth, and after being destroyed, their elements ultimately merge back into earth. For this reason the great sages place their thoughts, words, and deeds in You. How can they avoid You? How can men not place their feet on the earth as they walk?” 2 How is the Supreme Brahman (brhat) understood (upalabdham)? After the material universe is destroyed (vikrteh), the Supreme Brahman remains (avasesataya). What is that like? It is like earthly clay. As clay is transformed into pots or so many other things, the pots and other things retain their identity as clay. The same may be understood (upalabdham) of the Supreme Brahman (brhat). The Vedas consider (avayanti) that the creation and dissolution of the material world are but transformations (vikrteh) of the Supreme Brahman (brhat). The Taittiriya Upanisad (3.1.1) explains: “Everything has come from the Supreme.” As the pots and other things retain their identity as clay, so the entire world retains its identity as part of the Supreme. The question may be raised: ‘If everything is but a transformation of the Supreme, then why do the Vedas say the Supreme is “Not this, not that?” The answer is given here in the word ‘avikrtat’ (because the Supreme remains unchanged). The Supreme as the ultimate origin is again described in Vedanta-sutra (2.1.27): “Because the Supreme is the root from which the Vedic statements have sprung.” The meaning is that by His inconceivable potency the Lord remains unchanged (even though everything that exists is a transformation of Him). 3 Although the word Brahman (brhat) is used here and it is here said that Brahman has potencies, the real meaning of Brahman here is Bhagavan (Supreme Personality of Godhead). This is so because the Supreme Personality of Godhead cannot be separated from His potencies. Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead is not small or insignificant, He is here called Brahman (the Great). Because the example of earthly clay in this verse indicates that Brahman is the active creator of the worlds, it should be understood that the impersonal Brahman is not indicated here. In the second half of this verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.15) the Personified Vedas explain that Brahman is ultimately the Supreme Personality of Godhead. They say: “O Lord, for this reason the great sages place their thoughts, words, and deeds in You. The Supreme Personality of Godhead and the impersonal Brahman are one and the same. They are only thought to be different because in one the Lord displays His transcendental qualities and in the other He does not display them. The sages then say: “O Lord, how can the Vedas avoid You? How can men not place their feet on the earth as they walk?” This means: ‘How can the Vedas become fruitful? O Lord, they become fruitful only by finding You.’ This is confirmed by the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.32.32): 4 “Philosophical research culminates in understanding the Supreme Personality of Godhead. After achieving this understanding, when one becomes free from the material modes of nature, he attains the stage of devotional service. Either by devotional service directly or by philosophical research, one has to find the same destination, which is the Supreme Personality of Godhead.”* 5 In Madhvacarya’s commentary the Sruti-sastra is quoted: “All names are ultimately names of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. As rivers flow to the ocean, so all names enter the Supreme.” 6 All the Vedas describe the Supreme as the Supreme Personality of Godhead and also as the impersonal Brahman. These two names of the Lord are true. They are not imaginary. The Personified Vedas explain (10.87.16): 7 “O master of the three Lords of the universe, diving into the nectar ocean of topics about You, which washes away all the sins of the world, the wise become free of all sufferings. O great one, how can we describe the great devotees who, with a pure heart shaking off the vices of this world, the power of time, and the three modes of nature, serve You, who are full of eternal transcendental bliss?" 8 In this verse the word 'try-adhipate' means 'O Lord of the three deities headed by Brahman (Brahma, Visnu and Siva)'. This means that the purusa-avatara, Lord Narayana is the origin of these three deities, and the Supreme Personality of Godhead (Lord Krsna) is, because He is naturally superior, the master of Lord Narayana. The next phrase means: 'O master (Krsna) of the master (Narayana) of the masters (Brahma, Visnu and Siva), because You are the final goal of the Vedas, the intelligent demigods renounce their portions of the Vedic yajnas and without any other activity dive into the nectar ocean of Your glories, which washes away all sins (tava akhila-loka-mala-ksapana-kathamrtabdhim avagahya). 'Kim uta' means 'what can be said?' The phrase 'tapamsi jahuh' may mean either 'they become free of all sufferings', or ;they perform severe austerities.' The verse continues: 'With a pure heart shaking off both the vices of this world, the power of time, and the three modes of nature headed by the mode of goodness (sva-dhama-vidhutasaya-kala-gunah), they serve You, the Supreme Truth who is known as Brahman and who is full of eternal transcendental bliss (parama bhajanti ye padam ajasra-sukhanubhavam).' The sequence of events here is first they dive into the ocean of nectar, then they become free of all sufferings, and then they serve the Lord. 9 The meaning here is that the devotees have given up the idea that the impersonal Brahman is the only feature of the Supreme. Here three kinds of men are described: the bewildered, the intelligent and the successful. It is seen that without any creative speculation, speaking only the truth, the Vedas describe the Supreme Personality of Godhead to these three kinds of men. If it is not seen (that the Vedas describe the Supreme Personality of Godhead) then such readers because of their ignorance do not attain the purification described in the words 'akhila-loka-mala-ksapana.' When the class of bewildered men do not see this (that the Vedas describe the Supreme Personality of Godhead), then the adage 'like an iron rod untouched by fire' describes the Vedas' inability to purify them. When the intelligent class does not see this, but instead speculates on the meaning of the Vedas, the adage 'Like a person who does not believe what has had heard of the virtues of the barren woman's children' describes their cynical rejection of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Or, this class, even after understanding the truth, will not abandon non devotional duties and serve the Lord. Then the adage 'Like a person who, even after hearing the royal glories of the Ganges refuses to leave his own place to go there' applies to them. When even the third class, they who are ultimately successful because they have attained self-realisation, curtly declines to dive into the nectar of the topics of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the adage 'like a cynic who declines to dive into a nectar lake because he mistakenly thinks the river must be even more sweet' applies to them. The true result of hearing the Lord's glories is described in the Visnu Purana in these words: "When He enters the ears, Lord Hari kills all sins." 10 This is also described in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam

10.87.40): “Dear Lord, anyone who, by Your grace, has understood the glories of Your lotus feet is callous to material happiness and distress, which arise from You alone. He is callous to praise or condemnation by the ordinary people. If the devotee can thus maintain the transcendental position, in the association of pure devotees daily hearing Your glorious activities in different ages and incarnations, then You guarantee His liberation.” 11 This is again described in the First Canto (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.7.11): “Srila Sukadeva Gosvami, son of Srila Vyasadeva, was not only transcendentally powerful. He was also very dear to the devotees of the Lord. Thus he underwent the study of this great narration (Srimad Bhagavatam).”* 12 In this way it is proved that the Vedas describe the Supreme Personality of Godhead and His transcendental qualities. 13 This is confirmed by the following words of the Sruti: “O Visnu, by chanting Your holy name with a little understanding, we attain profound transcendental knowledge.” Rg Veda 1.156.3 “As water never touches a lotus leaf, so sin never touches a person who knows the Supreme Personality of Godhead.” Chandogya Upanisad 4.14.3 “Work done for the Supreme Personality of Godhead will not bind one to the law of karma.” Isa Upanisad 2 “One who has abandoned all material activities, whether pious or impious, is not touched by sin.” Sruti-sastra “Meditating on the Supreme Personality of Godhead, he does not think: Why did I not do pious deeds? Why did I sin?” Taittiriya Upanisad 2.9.1 “They who have attained liberation still worship the Supreme Personality of Godhead.” Sruti-sastra In these and other verses describing devotional service the supremacy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described. It is not at all refuted by the words of the Sruti-sastra: 14 At this point someone may protest: ‘The words that you think describe the Supreme are still material in nature. The Supreme can never be described in words. This is confirmed in the Sruti-sastra: “Words cannot describe the Supreme. The mind will never reach Him.” Taittiriya Upanisad 2.4.1 and 2.9.1 “Words cannot describe the Supreme.” Sruti-sastra “The Supreme, who enables us to speak, cannot be described in words.’ Kena Upanisad 1.5 “He who gives the ears the power to hear cannot be heard by the ears.” Kena Upanisad 1.8 In this way the idea that the Supreme can be described in words is refuted. 15 To this doubt the answer is given: When something cannot be described directly, it also cannot be described indirectly. Why is this not so? The two kinds of description are not different because both ultimately come within the realm of words. Therefore, as material things may be described directly, so by saying the Supreme cannot be described, an indirect description is given of the Supreme. In this way it is proved that the Supreme can be described.

1 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the ultimate goal and conclusion of the Vedas is confirmed by the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.41): “O Lord, because You are limitless even the great demigods cannot find where You end. Even You cannot find where You end. Within You the universes covered by ten and seven layers move as specks of dust tossed through the ether by the wheel of time. Rejecting everything that is not You, the Vedas become fruitful when they find You.” 2 Here it is said that the Lord’s transcendental forms and qualities are beyond description in two ways: 1. Because they are infinite and 2. Because they cannot be properly described. The Personified Vedas describe the infinity of the Lord’s form in the words: ‘O Lord, because You are limitless (anantataya) even the great demigods, the rulers of Svargaloka and other planets, cannot find where You end.” Why are You limitless (anantataya)? Because You have no end. Only atheists say You have limits. Why are You all knowing or all powerful? The Personified Vedas says: “Because You have no limits (anantataya).” The Lord’s all knowingness and all powerfulness are real. They are not an imagination, as the horn of a rabbit is. This is described in the Sruti-sastra” “If someone says he fully understands the Lord of Vaikuntha, then he does not understand Him at all.” In this way the Lord’s limitlessness is described. The Personified Vedas then say: “Within You (yad-antara) the universes (anda-nicayah) covered by ten and seven layers (savaranah), move (vanti) as specks of dust (rajamsi) tossed through the ether (khe) by the wheel of time (saha vayasa).” Because limitless universes wander within Him, the Lord is limitless and because He is the shelter of wonderful qualities, His qualities are also limitless. 3 This is also described in Sruti-sastra: “O Gargi, the Supreme is above heaven, below the earth, and between heaven and earth. The Supreme is, always was, and always will be.” Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad 3.8.4 “The heroic glories of Lord Visnu are countless as the specks of dust on the earth.” Sruti-sastra 4 The Personified Vedas continue (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.41) quoted in text 1): ‘O Lord, the Vedas become fruitful when they find You.” This means: “By describing how You are limitless, the Vedas find their conclusion in You.” In the Sruti-sastra it is said that the bliss of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is hundreds of times greater than the bliss of the demigod Brahma (Taittiriya Upanisad 2.4.1): “Words turn from the Supreme. One cannot attain Him with the mind’s help. A wise man who understands the bliss of the Supreme Personality of Godhead never fears anything.” Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead is limitless, His bliss is beyond measuring and beyond the power of words to describe. 5 This is again described in Vedic literature: “Even when wise men see great Mount Meru they still cannot understand it. In the same way the Supreme Personality of Godhead cannot be understood, described, or imagined.” 6 By this explanation of how it is that the Supreme Personality of Godhead cannot be described, it is proved that the Supreme Personality of Godhead can be described. The form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is directly described in these words (Taittiriya Upanisad 2.1.3): “The Supreme Personality of Godhead is eternal, full of knowledge, and free of all limits.” The Lord’s transcendental qualities are described in these words (Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.8): “The deeds of the Supreme Personality of Godhead display His limitless knowledge and power.” The Personified Vedas continue (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.41, quoted in text 1): ‘Rejecting everything that is not You, the Vedas become fruitful when they find You.’ This means: ‘Rejecting the material world, they find their conclusion in You.” 7 That the Lord is the origin of all qualities is described in Bhagavad-gita (10.4-5) where He says: “Intelligence, knowledge, freedom from doubt and delusion, forgiveness, truthfulness, control of the senses, control of the mind, happiness and distress, birth, death, fear, fearlessness, non violence, equanimity, satisfaction, austerity, charity, fame and infamy - all these various qualities of living beings are created by Me alone.”* It is also said in Vedic literature: “Shyness, intelligence, fear and everything else, have all come from the heart of the Supreme.” However, material knowledge and other material things are not identical with the Supreme. This is described in Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad (4.4.22): “This Supreme is not this. The Supreme is not that.” The idea that the material world is the Supreme is again refuted in these words (Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.8): “All His senses are transcendental. Any one of His senses can perform the action of any other sense.”* The Supreme Personality of Godhead is again described in these words: “The Supreme Personality of Godhead is eternal and full of knowledge. He is free of all limits.” Taittiriya Upanisad 2.1.3 “The deeds of the Supreme Personality of Godhead display His limitless knowledge and power.” Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.8 8 Therefore the Lord’s knowledge and qualities are different from matter. The Personified Vedas therefore say: ‘Rejecting material knowledge and all other material things, the Vedas find their conclusion in You, O Lord.’ Although, because He is beyond the range of the material intelligence, the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead cannot be described, nevertheless, He can actually be described to some extent. The Lord is beyond the realm of the material senses, as is confirmed by the statement 'O Lord, You are the tenth manifestation, beyond the world of matter.' By this statement alone it is seen that the Lord reveals His form only by His own wish. Because by His own wish He is seen in the pure heart of a devotee, the Vedas conclude that He has the power to appear only when He wishes. 9 That the Vedas are identical with the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in the following words: "The Vedas and the impersonal Brahman, are both My eternal forms." The Supreme Personality of Godhead in Vedic literature "The Vedas are identical with the Supreme Personality of Godhead." Srimad Bhagavatam 11.3.43 "The Vedas are directly the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Narayana, and are self-born. This we have heard from Yamaraja."* Srimad Bhagavatam 6.1.40 10 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the conclusion of the Vedas is also confirmed in the following words: "This beautiful Bhagavatam, compiled by the great sage Vyasadeva (in his maturity), is sufficient in itself for God realisation. What is the need of any other scripture? As soon as one attentively and submissively hears the message of Bhagavatam, by this culture of knowledge the Supreme Lord is established within his heart."* Srimad Bhagavatam 1.1.2 "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in the Upanisads." Brhad-aranyaka Upanisad 3.9.26 In this way the Vedas teach that the Supreme Personality of Godhead may be approached through the Upanisads. It is also said: "Looking through the eye of the Vedas one may see the Supreme Personality of Godhead." 11 Rejecting the darkness of matter, the Supreme Personality of Godhead personally appears by the means of His self-manifestation-potency, which is the Vedas. Even so, He still cannot be described by ordinary, material words. As the manifestation of the sun is the same as the sun's reflection in a pot, so the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the master of all potencies, is also the same as His potencies, and then again He and His potencies are also different. In the same way He is described by words and then again words cannot describe Him. 12 This is described in the Garuda Purana: "Because He is inconceivable, the Supreme cannot be described by words and He can be described by the words of the Vedas. He cannot be approached by logic and He can be approached by logic. He cannot be known and He can be known. This is the conclusion of the Smrti." 13 This is also described in the Sruti (Kena Upanisad 1.4): "The Supreme is different from both the known and the unknown." Parasara Muni explains: "We sages meditate on the Supreme Brahman, who is the abode of all potencies. When Lord Hari enters the ear, faith grows and sins perish." 14 At this point someone may protest: 'Is it not so that the Vedas are the self-manifest-potency of the Supreme Brahman, who is known as the Supreme Personality of Godhead? Since the Supreme Personality of Godhead is thus revealed through His potency the Vedas, how is the impersonal Brahman, which has no potencies, revealed? Our opinion is that the impersonal Brahman is revealed in the Vedas because it is one of the potencies of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is described in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 8.24.32): 15 “You will be thoroughly advised and favoured by Me, and because of your inquiries, everything about My glories, which are known as param brahma, will be manifest within your heart. Thus you will know everything about Me.”* 16 Because the impersonal Brahman and the Supreme Personality of Godhead are not different, the impersonal Brahman is not self-manifest. Here this is explained even in plain and ordinary words and it is also explained in the Sruti-sastra. All of this does not refute the existence of the Lord’s transcendental form, which is manifested by the Lord’s pastime potency and perceived by devotional service. What is the nature of the Lord’s pastime-potency? It is perfectly pure. This is described in the Suparna-sruti: “They who smell the scents of matter do not smell the Supreme. They who see matter do not see the Supreme. They who hear matter do not hear the Supreme. They who know matter do not know the Supreme.” The verse quoted in the beginning of this anuccheda was spoken by the Personified Vedas to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

1 The potencies and the Lord who is the master of all potencies are one. The most important form of the master of potencies is Bhagavan, or the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The most important potency is Laksmi-devi, or the goddess of fortune. How many forms does limitless Laksmi-devi manifest? Srimad Bhagavatam (10.39.55) names some of Her expansions: 2 "The Lord was served by His potencies Sri, Pusti, Gira, kanti, Kirti, Tusti, Ila, Ja, Vidya, Avidya, Sakti and Maya." 3 The word "Sakti" here means 'Maha-laksmi'. "Sakti" here means the Lord's first, great, internal potency. 'Maya' here is His external potency. All these potencies beginning with Sri may be divided into two groups: 1. Spiritual, and 2. Material. These groups are headed by Sri and Maya respectively. The first group, the personal opulence of the Lord, is headed by Sri. It is not headed by Maha-laksmi because She is the root from which all (both spiritual and material) potencies come. This has already been explained. The second group, headed by Maya, is the opulence of the material universes. 4 The Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself describes the potency Sri in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.16.7): "Because I am the servitor of My devotees, My lotus feet have become so sacred that they immediately wipe out all sin, and I have acquired such a disposition that the goddess Sri does not leave Me, even though I have no attachment for her and others praise her beauty and observe sacred vows to secure from her a slight favour."* At the end of the Fourth canto (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.31.22) Sri Narada describes goddess Sri in these words: 5 "Although the Supreme Personality of Godhead is self-sufficient, He becomes dependent on His devotees. He does not care for the goddess Sri, nor for the kings and demigods who are after the favours of goddess Sri. Where is that person who is actually grateful and will not worship the Personality of Godhead?"* 6 This verse explains that Sri is the patroness of many human kings and others who offer prayers to her. Cursed by Durvasa Muni, she appeared in the three material worlds, where she was born from the ocean of milk and with a glance became the beloved of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The material potencies (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.39.55, quoted in text 2) are next described. Ila is the earth, or also the pastime potency. Among the spiritual potencies, Vidya, or knowledge, is the potency that enlightens one about the truth. It is also named Samvit. The pastime potency is divided into knowledge and ignorance potencies. The ignorance potency, which makes one forget the Supreme Lord's powers and opulences, brought the bliss of ecstatic love to Lord Krsna's mother (Yasoda). In the same way it also bewildered the gopis, as is described in the Gopala-tapani Upanisad. This will be described in detail at the proper time. The material ignorance potency makes the conditioned souls in the material world forget the Supreme Personality of Godhead. It covers their true knowledge. 7 From the pastime potency the potencies Sandhini, Samvit, Hladini, Bhakty-adhara-sakti, Murti, Vimala, Jaya, Yoga, Prahvi, Isana, Anugraha, and others are manifested. Sandhini is the potency of eternal existence. Jaya is the potency of glory. Yoga is the potency of Yogamaya. Samvit is the potency of knowledge and ignorance and it is also the potency of pure transcendence. Prahvi is the potency of wonderful, limitless ability. Isana is the potency that makes everything possible. These and other potencies are manifest from the pastime potency. Because the Maya potency is manifest from the external potency, it is not counted among them. Part of the external potency, it remains far away from the Supreme Lord's purusa-avatara. In the Tenth Canto, Thirty seventh Chapter (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.37.22-23) Narada prays to Sri Krsna: 8 "My Lord, let me offer my respectful obeisances unto Your lotus feet. You are situated completely in the transcendental position in perfect knowledge and bliss. You are complete in Yourself and are beyond all desires. By exhibiting Your internal potency, You have set up the influence of maya. Your unlimited potency cannot even be measured by anyone.* 9 "My dear Lord, You are the supreme controller. You are under Your own internal potency, and it is simply vain to think that You are dependent on any of Your creations. You have taken birth in the Yadu dynasty, or the Vrsni dynasty. Your advent on the surface of the earth in Your original form of eternal blissful knowledge is Your own pastime. You are not dependent on anything but Yourself; therefore I offer my respectful obeisances unto Your lotus feet."* 10 An explanation of these two verses follows. The words 'visuddha-vijnana-ghananm' mean 'the Supreme Truth, whose transcendental form is full of pure knowledge'. "Sva-samsthaya' means either 'with Your transcendental form' or 'with Your own potencies'. 'Samapta' means either 'eternally perfect' or 'completely full'. 'Sarvartha' means 'all opulences'. 'Amogha-vanchitam' means 'never cheated by insignificant, useless material desires.' Thinking someone might consider the Lord cheated in this way, Narada spoke the next words (which begin with 'sva-tejasa'). 'Sva-tejasa' means 'by the power of Your internal potency'. 'Nitya-nivrtta-maya-guna-pravaham' Means 'far away from the modes of material nature.' 11 The words 'atma-mayaya' mean that the Lord associates with His internal potency, not with His potency of the modes of material nature. 'Bhagavantam imahi' means 'We take shelter of the Supreme Personality of Godhead'. The second verse concludes: 'I offer my respectful obeisances to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is named Sri Krsna and who by His plenary portion is present as the Supersoul in everyone's heart." 12 What does the word 'isvaram' mean here? The verse says 'svasrayam atma-mayaya', which means 'He is not dependent on His maya potency, which creates various material forms for the individual spirit souls', or it may also mean 'He is the shelter of the maya potency, which creates various material forms for the individual spirit souls. What does the word 'tvam' (You) mean here? It means 'Now that You have appeared in this world, Your plenary expansion who acts as the controller of maya has entered within You. At the same time, in order to enjoy many pastimes (kridartham) with Your potencies and because You love Your devotees, You have appeared in a humanlike form (abhyattam manusya-vigraham).” The humanlike form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in Srimad Bhagavatam: “The form of the Supreme Brahman is like a human form.” 13 The verse continues: ‘dhuryam yadu-vrsni-satvatam’ (You are the leader of the Yadus, Vrsnis and Satvatas. This shows that the Lord is full of love for His eternal associates. In the verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.39.55) quoted in the beginning of this anuccheda (text 2), Pusti and the other potencies are all partial expansions of the potency Sri. ‘Vidya’ there means ‘knowledge’ and the following word ‘avidya’ may also be properly understood as ‘avidya’ (with a long initial a), in which case it means ‘the great knowledge’. The great knowledge here is pure devotional service. This is described in Bhagavad-gita (9.2): “This knowledge (of devotional service) is the king of education, the most secret of all secrets. It is the purest knowledge, and because it gives direct perception of the self by realisation, it is the perfection of religion. It is everlasting, and it is joyfully performed.”* 14 In Srimad Bhagavatam 10.39.55, quoted in text 2, the word ‘maya’ means ‘the external potency’. The spiritual potencies headed by Sri should be understood to be different from the external potency. The other potencies are like the external potency. In the pure description of the Lord it is said that the Lord’s internal potency is divided into three according to the Lord’s nature of being eternal, full of knowledge, and full of bliss. This is described in Visnu Purana (1.12.69) where Sri Dhruva says: 15 “O Lord, You are the support of everything. The three attributes hladini, sandhini and samvit exist in You as one spiritual energy. But the material modes, which cause happiness, misery, and mixtures of the two, do not exist in You, for You have no material qualities.”* 16 “The word ‘hladini’ means ‘the Lord’s internal potency that gives bliss’. ‘Tvayi sarva-samsthitau’ means ‘Everything rests in You. It does not rest in the individual living entities (jivas).’ The verse says: ‘The three modes of material nature do not stay in You.’ These modes are described in the words ‘hlada-tapa-kari misra’. ‘Hlada’ means ‘the material mode of goodness, which pleases the heart’. ‘Tapa-kari’ means ‘the material mode of ignorance, which removes all happiness’. ‘Misra’ means ‘the material mode of passion, which gives a mixture of happiness and misery.’ The verse here says that these three material modes do not exist in the Lord (guna-varjite). ‘In the Sarvajna-sukti it is said: 17 “The Supreme Personality of Godhead, the Supreme Controller, is always full of transcendental bliss and is accompanied by the potencies hladini and samvit. The conditioned soul, however, is always covered by ignorance and embarrassed by the threefold miseries of life. Thus he is a treasure-house of all kinds of tribulations”.* 18 In sequence of importance, with the last the most important, these three potencies are listed sandhini, samvit and hladini. As all pots are made by some potter, so everything that is has a cause somewhere. That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is eternal and is not preceded by a cause that created Him is confirmed by the Sruti-sastra (Chandogya Upanisad 6.2.1): “O gentle student, before this material world was created, the eternal Supreme existed." That the Supreme Personality of Godhead exists in all places, times and circumstances, and gives eternal life to others, is effected by His sandhini potency. That the Supreme Personality of Godhead knows everything and enlightens others is effected by His samvit potency. That the Supreme Personality of Godhead experiences bliss and gives bliss to others is effected by His hladini potency, which is the best of all. 19 In this way it is proved that the Lord's internal potency is divided in three. The potency by which the Lord personally appears in His transcendental form is called Visuddha-sattva, or the potency of pure goodness. The Lord does not appear in any way other than through this potency, just as He does not know or teach in any way other than through His samvit potency. The Visuddha-sattva potency is called pure because it is untouched by the material potency maya. That the Visuddha-sattva potency is beyond the realm of matter is explained in these words spoken by Markandeya to Narayana Rsi (Srimad Bhagavatam 12.8.45-46): 20 "O my Lord, O supreme friend of the conditioned soul, although for the creation, maintenance and annihilation of this world You accept the modes of goodness, passion and ignorance, which constitute Your illusory potency, You specifically employ the mode of goodness to liberate the conditioned souls. The other two modes simply bring them suffering, illusion and fear." 21 "O Lord, because fearlessness, spiritual happiness and the kingdom of God are all achieved through the mode of pure goodness, Your devotees consider this mode, but never passion and ignorance, to be a direct manifestation of You, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Intelligent persons thus worship Your beloved transcendental form, composed of pure goodness, along with the spiritual forms of Your pure devotees." 22 An explanation of these two verses follows. These verses mean: 'O Lord (isa), the modes of goodness, passion and ignorance are the potencies You employ in Your pastimes?" How is that? "They are employed for the creation, maintenance and annihilation of the material world." The mode of goodness (sattvamayi) is employed to bring peace (prasantyai) and great happiness. The other two modes, passion and ignorance, are not employed for that purpose. They do not bring peace and they are useless for advancement in service of the Lord. Therefore the words 'vyasana-moha-bhiyah' (suffering, illusion and fear) are used here to describe their employment. The second verse says: 'O Lord (bhagavan), therefore (tasmat) intelligent persons (kusalah) serve (bhajanti) Your transcendental form of Lord Visnu, which is composed of pure goodness. In the same way they also worship the forms of the individual living entities such as Svayambhuva Manu and others who are Your pure devotees, and whose forms are also composed of pure goodness.' They never worship the forms of Brahma, Siva or the other demigods. Why? Because Your form brings peace to the world (loka-prasantyai) it is very dear to them. 23 At this point the Supreme Personality of Godhead may protest: 'In this way you have proved that My form is a manifestation of the mode of goodness. Why do you insist, then, that it is not a product of the illusory potency, maya?" The reply is given: "O Lord, because fearlessness, spiritual happiness, and the kingdom of God, Vaikunthaloka, are all achieved through the mode of pure goodness, Your devotees consider this mode to be a direct manifestation of You, the Supreme Personality of Godhead." From this it should be understood that the mode of goodness mentioned here is the spiritual potency by which the Lord manifests His form according to His own wish. The goodness here is not a product of matter. This is described by Lord Siva in the following words (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.3.23): 24 "I am always engaged in meditating on Lord Vasudeva in pure Krsna consciousness (suddha-sattva, or pure goodness). Krsna consciousness is always pure consciousness (goodness), in which the Supreme Personality of Godhead, known as Vasudeva, is revealed without any covering."* 25 The reason the Supreme Personality of Godhead cannot be understood by the senses of mind is here given: He cannot be understood through the material modes of nature. The impure mode of goodness is material in nature and the Lord cannot be understood through it. The pure mode of goodness, however, is the Lord's spiritual potency, and by its agency one can attain the Lord. 26 The words (Srimad Bhagavatam 12.8.46 quoted in Text 21) 'loko yato bhayam utatma-sukham' (fearlessness, spiritual happiness, and the kingdom of God are all achieved through the mode of pure goodness) proof that pure goodness is a spiritual potency of the Lord. That the Lord's form must be manifest by His spiritual potency and cannot be manifest by a material mode of nature is confirmed in Srimad Bhagavatam (10.3.24): "My dear Lord, there are different Vedas, some of which describe You as unperceivable through words and the mind. Yet You are the origin of the entire cosmic manifestation. You are Brahman, the greatest of everything, full of effulgence like the sun. You have no material cause, You are free from change and deviation, and You have no material desires. Thus the Vedas say that You are the substance. Therefore, my Lord, You are directly the origin of all Vedic statements, and by understanding You, one gradually understands everything. You are different from the light of Brahman and Paramatma, yet You are not different from them. Everything emanates from You. Indeed, You are the cause of all causes, Lord Visnu, the light of all transcendental knowledge."* In Srimad Bhagavatam 12.8.46 the word 'abhayam' means 'fearlessness' and 'anyat', although one word, means the two words 'passion and ignorance.' In the previous verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 12.8.45) the word 'anya' also meant both 'passion and ignorance'. In this way the goodness that manifests the Lord's form is different from material goodness. This is also explained in Srimad Bhagavatam (11.4.4): "The form of the Lord then entered the three worlds. From His senses the working and knowledge acquiring senses of the embodied beings became manifest. From His potency their knowledge became manifest. From His breathing their actions and the powers of their bodies and senses became manifest. With His three modes headed by goodness, He creates, maintains and destroys the worlds." The words 'jnanam svatah' are explained by Srila Sridhara Svami in these words: "These words mean that from the Lord's own potency of pure goodness the knowledge of the embodied beings is manifest." 27 This is also described at the end of Brahma's prayers (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.11.60): "These descriptions of Lord Krsna's pastimes with His cowherd boys, His eating with them on the bank of the Yamuna, and Lord Brahma's prayers unto Him, are all transcendental subject matters. Anyone who hears, recites, or chants them surely gets all his spiritual desires fulfilled."* Srila Sridhara Svami comments: "The word 'vyaktetarat' here means 'transcendental pure goodness, which is different from the world of matter.'" This is also described by Maharaja Bharata (Srimad Bhagavatam 5.7.14): "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is situated in pure goodness. He illuminates the entire universe and bestows all benedictions upon His devotees. The Lord has created this universe from His own spiritual potency. According to His desire, the Lord entered this universe as the Supersoul, and by virtue of His different potencies, He is maintaining all living entities desiring material enjoyment. Let me offer my respectful obeisances unto the Lord, who is the giver of intelligence."* Srila Sridhara Svami comments: "The words 'paro rajah' mean 'beyond the material mode of passion, or situated in the pure mode of goodness'." The Vedic literatures explain that the material modes of nature, which begin with material goodness, affect the individual living entity (jiva), but they have no affect on the Supreme Personality of Godhead (isa). This is confirmed by the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.25.12): "The material modes of goodness, passion and ignorance influence the individual living entities, but they have no influence on Me." 28 The Lord again explains in Sri Bhagavad-gita Upanisad (7.12-14): "Know that all states of being - be they of goodness, passion or ignorance - are manifested by My energy. I am, in one sense, everything, but I am independent. I am not under the modes of material nature, for they, on the contrary, are within Me.* 29 "Deluded by the three modes (goodness, passion and ignorance), the whole world does not know Me, who am above the modes and inexhaustible.* 30 "This divine energy of Mine, consisting of the three modes of material nature, is difficult to overcome. But those who have surrendered unto Me can easily cross beyond it."* 31 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is beyond the modes of material nature is also described in the Tenth Canto (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.88.5): "Sri Hari, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, is situated beyond the range of material nature; therefore He is the supreme transcendental person. He can see everything inside and outside; therefore He is the supreme overseer of all living entities. If someone takes shelter at His lotus feet and worships Him, he also attains a transcendental position."* 32 This is also described in Sri Visnu Purana (1.9.43): "May the Supreme Personality of Godhead, in whom material goodness and the other material modes are never present, and who is the first of all who are pure, be pleased with me." 33 By the use of the adjective 'prakrta'

(material) here the existence of other, non material modes is implied. In the word ‘prasidatu’ (may He be pleased), the other, non material mode is the source of the Lord’s pleasure. This other mode is pure goodness. It is described in Sri Visnu Purana (1.12.69, quoted in text 15): “O Lord, You are the support of everything. The three attributes hladini, sandhini, and samvit exist in You as one spiritual energy. But the material modes, which cause happiness, misery and mixtures of the two, do not exist in You, for You have no material qualities.”* 34 That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is beyond the touch of the material modes of nature is also described in the Tenth canto, where Indra, the king of the demigods, says (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.27.4): “My dear Lord, You are transcendental to all the material qualities. Your transcendental position is visuddha-sattvam, which is above the platform of the material modes and Your transcendental abode is above the disturbance of the material qualities. Your name, fame, form, quality and pastimes are all beyond the material nature. Your abode is accessible only for one who undergoes severe austerities and penances and is completely freed from the onslaught of material qualities like passion and ignorance. If someone thinks that when You come within this material world You accept the modes of material nature, he is mistaken. The webs of the material qualities are never able to touch You, and You certainly do not accept them when You are present within this world. Your Lordship is never conditioned by the laws of material nature.”* 35 An explanation of this verse follows. The word ‘dhama’ means ‘the Lord’s internal potency’, and the Lord’s purity is described by the two adjectives ‘dhvasta-rajas-tamaskam’ (free from passion and ignorance) and ‘tapomayam’ (consisting of transcendental knowledge attained by performing austerities). ‘Tapah’ here means ‘transcendental knowledge attained by performing austerities.’ This is described in the Sruti-sastra: “By performing austerities the sage attained transcendental knowledge.” The meaning is that knowledge attained by performing austerities is free from even the slightest touch of matter. It is spiritual knowledge. It is different from the material mode of goodness. Therefore this verse explains: ‘O Lord, material goodness and the other material modes do not exist within You. You do not accept them.” 36 The following statement (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.2.34-35) of the demigods headed by Brahma is an accurate description of the Lord’s transcendental position: “O Lord, during the time of maintenance You manifest several incarnations, all with transcendental bodies, beyond the material modes of nature. When You appear in this way, You bestow all good fortune upon the living entities by teaching them to perform Vedic activities such as ritualistic ceremonies, mystic yoga, austerities, penances, and ultimately samadhi, ecstatic absorption in thoughts of You. Thus You are worshipped by the Vedic principles.* 37 “O Lord, cause of all causes, if Your transcendental body were not beyond the modes of material nature, one could not understand the difference between matter and transcendence. Only by Your presence can one understand the transcendental nature of

Your Lordship, who are the controller of material nature. Your transcendental nature is very difficult to understand unless one is influenced by the presence of Your transcendental form."* 38 An explanation of these verses follows. In these words the Lord's form is described as not different from the mode of goodness. How is this mode of goodness described? It is pure goodness (sattvam visuddham). It is described as pure because it is completely free from the slightest touch or mixture of the material modes of passion or ignorance. It is the Lord's internal potency. It is supremely pure because it is not touched by even the smallest particle of matter. 39 Why does the Supreme Personality of Godhead come (srayate) to this world? So the embodied souls (saririnam) may learn to fix their thoughts on His lotus feet and, most important, so the devotees may taste the happiness of devotional service. This is described by Srimati Kunti-devi in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 1.8.20): "O Lord, You Yourself descend to propagate the transcendental science of devotional service unto the hearts of the advanced transcendentalists and mental speculators, who are purified by being able to discriminate between matter and spirit."* 40 What is the nature of the Lord's form? The answer is 'sreya-upayanam', which means 'it fulfils all the goals of life'. This means it is full of eternal, limitless, spiritual bliss. This means: 'O Lord, any idea that You and Your form are different is only a playful figure of speech. That idea is not true.' For this reason the people worship Your transcendental form (tavarhanam). How do they worship You? The answer is given in the words 'veda-kriya-yoga-tapah-samadhibhih' (by the Vedic principles, ritualistic ceremonies, mystic yoga, austerities, penances, and ultimately samadhi, ecstatic absorption in thoughts of You). 41 The next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.2.35, quoted in text 37) means: 'O Lord, cause of all causes (dhatah), if (cet) the knowledge that reveals You, the potency by which You manifest Yourself, were not a manifestation of pure goodness, then how could it, by revealing You, purify (marjanam) the ignorance of thinking You are different from Your form (ajnana-bhida)?" The conclusion, therefore, is that Your form is not at all material. At this point someone may protest: 'My perception is limited by the mode of material goodness. I cannot perceive higher than that. How, then, will I be able to perceive You.?" The answer is given in the words 'guna-prakasair anumiyate bhavann', which mean 'O Lord, through the material modes of nature You may only be understood theoretically. With their help You cannot be seen directly." That is the meaning. 42 Or the phrase 'vijnanam ajnanbhidapamarjanam guna-prakasair anumiyate bhavan' may mean 'If the ignorance of You is not removed, if there is only the help of the material modes, You can be understood only theoretically.' This means that only when His personal potency of pure goodness is manifest can the Lord be seen directly. The demigods then proceed to describe two ways in which the Lord may be known theoretically. They say: 'prakasate yasya ca yena va gunah' (You can be understood by the qualities manifest from You or by the qualities manifest by You). Because You do have an eternal relationship with the external material modes beginning with the mode of material goodness, Your nature can be inferred from the material modes themselves as the sun's rising can be inferred from the red light of dawn and fire can be inferred from the presence of smoke. In both (ways where You are inferred from the material modes) You are not manifest directly. In this way it is proved that You directly appear only through the potency of the non material mode of pure goodness. They who understand that the spiritual mode of pure goodness is free of any trace of the material modes of passion and ignorance, and who know that the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is a manifestation of pure goodness, become free from any touch of the mode of passion because they are by nature peaceful, they are always neutral, they are unagitated, they are situated in knowledge of the truth, and they do not speculate on the nature of the Lord, guessing it to be other than it is. 43 In the mode of goodness what is otherwise unknown is seen, in the mode of passion a great variety is seen, and in the mode of ignorance that variety disappears. In the mode of goodness one becomes neutral to the comings and goings of matter, in the mode of passion one tries to help others, and in the mode of ignorance one tries to harm others. In this way there is material creation, maintenance, and annihilation, and there is also indifference to all material happenings. If the slightest trace of passion were present, the word 'pure' in 'pure goodness' would become meaningless. In the state of pure goodness what is the use of stirring up the cauldron of passions? 44 If visuddha-sattva (pure goodness) is present, then sandhini-sakti's partial expansion, adhara-sakti (maintenance), samvit-sakti's partial expansion, atma-vidya (spiritual knowledge), and hladini-sakti's potency, guhya-vidya (confidential knowledge) are also present. Pure goodness is the combined form of these three potencies. By adhara-sakti the abode of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is manifested. This is described in Srimad Bhagavatam (12.8.46): "The great devotees know that the transcendental abode of the Lord is manifested from pure goodness." Atma-vidya (spiritual knowledge) consists of two parts: knowledge, and the actions that lead on to knowledge, and it eventually leads to the knowledge of service to the Lord. Guhya-vidya (confidential knowledge) consists of two parts: devotional service and the actions that lead one to devotional service, and it eventually leads to love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. 45 This is clearly described in the prayers to goddess Laksmi in the Sri Visnu Purana (1.9.118): "O beautiful goddess, with your potencies of yajna-vidya, maha-vidha, guhya-vidya, and atma-vidya, you give various kinds of fruitive results and various kinds of liberation." 46 In this verse 'yajna-vidya' means 'fruitive actions', 'maha-vidya' means 'astanga-yoga', 'guhya-vidya' means 'devotional service', and 'atma-vidya' means 'speculative knowledge'. The verse means: 'Because you are the shelter of all these, you give various kinds of liberation and various kinds of fruitive results.' That is the meaning. 47 In the mode of pure goodness (visuddha-sattva) the Vasudeva form of the Lord is manifest. Lord Siva describes this in the Fourth canto, Chapter three (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.3.23): “I am always engaged in meditating on Lord Vasudeva in pure Krsna consciousness. Krsna consciousness is always pure consciousness (visuddha-sattva), in which the Supreme Personality of Godhead, known as Vasudeva, is revealed without any covering.”* 48 An explanation of this verse follows. The word ‘visuddha’ here means ‘because it is the Lord’s internal potency it is free from even the slightest touch of matter’, and that is why the adjective ‘suddha’ (pure) is used here. This visuddha-sattva is here called ‘vasudeva-sattva’. Why is it called ‘vasudeva-sattva?’ Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead (puman) Lord Vasudeva is manifest (iyate) because of it (yat). 49 Firstly the word ‘sattva’ is used here because this potency manifests the Supreme Truth and is thus like the ‘sattva’ (goodness) that enables the unseen to be seen in this world. Secondly, the word ‘vasudeva’ is used because this potency enables one to understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Vasudeva. These two words are then put together into ‘vasudeva-sattva’, which is the same as ‘visuddha-sattva’ (pure goodness). The word ‘vasu’ means either ‘that which gives a home to the Supreme Personality of Godhead’ or ‘the home in which the Supreme Personality of Godhead resides.’ ‘Deva’ means either ‘He who enjoys transcendental pastimes’ or ‘He who shines with great splendour.’ These two words are then combined in the word ‘vasudeva’. Another meaning of ‘vasu’ is ‘wealth’. The Lord Himself says (Srimad Bhagavatam 911.19.39): “The principles of religion are the real wealth desired by men.” Therefore because the Supreme Personality of Godhead either possesses or causes other to possess the wealth (vasu) that is religion, He is known as ‘vasudeva’. In this way ‘vasudeva-sattva’ is the same as ‘visuddha-sattva’ (pure goodness). 50 The knowledge by which one understands the effulgent form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described by the Lord Himself in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 11.11.25-24): “Absolute knowledge is in the mode of goodness, knowledge based on duality is in the mode of passion, and foolish, materialistic knowledge is in the mode of ignorance. Knowledge based upon me, however, is understood to be transcendental.” 51 In this verse and in many other places in the scriptures, knowledge of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is said to be beyond the touch of the modes of material nature. In this way the word ‘visuddha’ (pure) should be understood. This is the nature of the internal potency by which the Supreme Personality of Godhead appears according to His own wish. ‘Sattva’ in this compound word may be understood to be either in the locative case (where Lord Vasudeva is manifest) or the instrumental case (by which Lord Vasudeva is manifest). 52 Srimad Bhagavatam 4.3.23 (quoted in text 47) clearly describes the Lord’s internal potency. The word ‘apavrtah’ there means ‘is revealed without any covering’. If material goodness is manifest it is only a reflection of pure goodness. It is like the reflection of a face in a mirror. The reflection is the ‘covered’ aspect of the original face. That is the meaning here. Srimad Bhagavatam explains: ‘With all my (me) heart (manasa) I meditate (vidhiyate) on the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavan), who is eternally manifested in the (tasmin) mode of pure goodness (sattve).' The conclusion is that when the heart is situated in pure goodness it is able to meditate on the Supreme Personality of Godhead. 53 At this point someone may protest: "If the Supreme Personality of Godhead can thus be meditated on with the mind, what is the need of the mode of pure goodness?" Srimad Bhagavatam answers with the words 'hy adhoksajah'. "Hy' means 'because' and 'adhiksajah' means 'He is beyond the reach of the senses.' This means the Lord cannot be understood by the material senses. In other readings the word 'manasa' (by the mind) is replaced by 'namasa')with respectful obeisances) and 'hi' (because) is replaced by the preposition 'anu'. The sentence then becomes: 'I offer respectful obeisances and serve Lord Vasudeva, who is manifest by His manifesting potency of pure goodness.' The Supreme Personality of Godhead is not manifest in any way other than through this potency. That is the meaning. Whether the Lord appears before us or remains invisible, we serve Him by bowing down to offer our respects. That is the meaning of this passage. 54 The potency of pure goodness, which manifests the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, appears as 'murti' and 'vasudeva'. The 'vasudeva' portion is Maharaja Vasudeva and the 'murti' portion is his religious wife. The potencies led by Sraddha and Pusti are her sisters. 55 Srimad Bhagavatam (1.3.9) explains: "In the fourth incarnation, the Lord became Nara and Narayana, the twin sons of the wife of King Dharma."* The word 'kala' here means 'potency'. Because it is seen that the Lord's incarnations named Nara-Narayana appeared there, this potency should be understood to be the potency of pure goodness, known as suddha-sattva or vasudeva-sattva. It is here named 'murti'. 56 After a description of Sraddha and many others, Murti is mentioned in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 4.1.51): "Murti, a reservoir of all respectable qualities, gave birth to Sri Nara-Narayana, the Supreme Personality of Godhead."* 57 The verse says: 'Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is a reservoir (utpatti) of all (sarva) respectable qualities (guna), appeared within her, she gave birth to Them both.' Because the Supreme Personality of Godhead, whose form (murti) is eternal and full of knowledge and bliss, appeared within her, she is named Murti. In the same way Maharaja Vasudeva is so named because the Lord appears in the potency of vasudeva-sattva (pure goodness). 58 Maharaja Vasudeva is also described in the Ninth Canto (Srimad Bhagavatam 9.24.30): "When Vasudeva was born, the demigods from the heavenly kingdom sounded kettledrums (anakadundubhi). Therefore Vasudeva, who provided the proper place for the appearance of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krsna, was also known as Anakadundubhi."* 59 If Maharaja Vasudeva were not the place where the Supreme Personality of Godhead appeared (hareh sthanam), then his name 'Vasudeva' would have no meaning. In this way it should be understood that the Supreme Personality of Godhead appears by the employment of His potency of pure goodness, which contains within it the potencies beginning with hladini and the potencies beginning with Sri. These potencies may be divided in three parts: 1. The potency of the opulence of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, 2. The potency that out of kindness gives opulence to others, and 3. The partial expansion of the Lord's opulence. These potencies also may be divided into two parts: 1. The potency by which the Supreme Personality of Godhead appears as the formless Brahman, and 2. The potency by which He displays His many transcendental forms. This is the explanation. The verse quoted at the beginning of this anuccheda was spoken by Srila Sukadeva Gosvami.

1 Goddess Laksmi is the Lord's limitless internal potency. Her form is a partial expansion of the Lord's form. This is described in these words (Srimad Bhagavatam 12.11.20): "Goddess Laksmi is the constant companion of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. She is a direct expansion of Lord Hari." 2 Srila Sridhara Svami comments: "The constant companion here is the Lord's own potency. The reason for this is given in the words: 'saksad atmanah' (directly manifested from Lord Hari). Because the Lord's form is perfectly spiritual and because she is not different from His form, she is His internal potency. 3 The word 'saksat' (directly) here confirms that goddess Laksmi is not the same as the illusory potency maya. This is confirmed by the following description of the illusory potency (Srimad Bhagavatam 2.5.13): "The illusory energy of the Lord is ashamed to be seen by the Lord." 4 That Goddess Laksmi is the Lord's constant companion is described in the hayasirsa-pancaratra: "Lord Hari is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Goddess

Laksmi is His potency. Goddess Laksmi is female. Lord Kesava is male. Goddess Laksmi is never away from Lord Visnu. Lord Hari is never away from Goddess Laksmi." 5 This is also described in Visnu Purana (1.8.15): "Goddess Laksmi, the mother of the universe, is the constant companion of Lord Visnu. O best of brahmanas, as Lord Visnu is all pervading, so is she." 6 The Visnu Purana (1.9.40) also explains: "As Lord Janardana (Krsna), who is the master of the universe and the ruler of the demigods appears in different incarnations, so does His companion Goddess Laksmi." 7 That Laksmi-devi's form is spiritual is described in the Skanda Purana: "Material nature is eternal. Laksmi-devi, the spiritual potency, which takes shelter of Lord Visnu, is also eternal. Lord Hari, who possesses all virtues, is also eternal. The wise say these three are eternal." 8 The Visnu Purana (1.9.44-45) also explains: "May supremely pure Lord Hari, whose spiritual potency cannot be bound by the string of time knotted with seconds, minutes and hours, be pleased with me. "May Lord Visnu, who is said to be the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is the Supersoul present in all embodied beings, and who is served by Laksmi-devi, be pleased with us." 9 Srila Sridhara Svami comments: "Because time controls only the material realm and because the Lord's eternal potency Laksmi-devi is not different from the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Laksmi-devi is not under the control of time, which is like a string made of seconds, minutes, and hours. That is the meaning here. This is so because she is not different from the form of the supremely pure Personality of Godhead. "At this point someone may protest: If Laksmi-devi is not different from Lord Visnu, then why is He said to be her husband? "The answer is given in the word 'paramesah'. 'Para' means 'supreme', 'ma' means 'mother', and 'isah' means 'husband'. Therefore 'paramesah' (para+ma+isah) means 'the husband of the supreme mother, Laksmi-devi'. The words 'suddho py upacaratah' (served by Laksmi-devi) are spoken with the intention to explain that although Laksmi-devi is, in some ways, not different from Lord Visnu, she is also, in other ways, different from Him. The first two lines of this stanza are two separate clauses. That is why the relative pronoun 'yah' (who) is used twice.' 10 That Laksmi-devi is both different from and not different from the Lord may be inferred from these words, where the demigod Brahma prays (Srimad Bhagavatam 3.9.23): "The Supreme Lord, the Personality of Godhead, is always the benefactor of the surrendered souls. His activities are always enacted through His internal potency, Rama, or the goddess of fortune. I pray only to engage in His service in the creation of the material world, and I pray that I not be materially affected by my works, for thus I may be able to give up the false prestige of being the creator."* 11 It is also said (Srimad Bhagavatam 7.9.2): "The goddess of fortune, Laksmiji, was requested to go before the Lord by all the demigods present, who because of fear could not do so. But even she had never seen such a wonderful and extraordinary form of the Lord, and thus she could not approach Him."* 12 Here Laksmi-devi was frightened because the form of Lord

Nrsimadeva had never been seen or heard of before. In this way Srimad Bhagavatam 12.11.20 (quoted in text 1) has been explained. The verse quoted in the beginning of this anuccheda was spoken by Srila Suta Gosvami.

Anuccheda 105

1 He whose form is eternal and full of knowledge and bliss, who possesses inconceivable, wonderful, unlimited potencies, who is religion and the most religious person, who is not different from anything and who is different from everything in many ways, who has no form and who has form, who is all-pervading and localised, who is an ocean of limitless mutually contradictory qualities, who by His own wish alone manifests His transcendental form which is completely different from the gross and subtle elements of the material world, whose left side is decorated by the present of His personal potency Laksmi-devi whose transcendental form is like His, whose transcendental form is splendidly manifested among His splendid associates in His transcendental abodes, whose potencies, wonderful playful qualities, pastimes, and features fill the great devotees with wonder, who is identical with the impersonal Brahman, who is the shelter and sustenance of the marginal potency that is the individual spirit souls, and whose abhasa-sakti manifests limitless material universes, is known as Bhagavan (the Supreme Personality of Godhead) by the wise. 2 The Supreme Personality of Godhead is different from matter. The materialists cannot see, understand, or imagine Him. He acts to create faith in the wise, who can understand Him. That he cannot be understood by the foolish, and that He can only be known through the revelation of the Vedas, is described in the following words, where the Personified Vedas says (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.87.24): 3 “Who, recently born and soon to die in this world, can know the Lord, who existed before all and who fathered the great sage Brahma and all the demigods great and small? When the Lord lies down and withdraws everything within Himself, there is no gross or subtle matter, material bodies made of the two, time or scripture.” 4 In this verse ‘bata’ means ‘O Lord’, ‘iha’ means ‘in this material world’, ‘agrasaram’ means ‘You, who were perfect in the beginning’, ‘avara-janma-layah’ means ‘who were recently born and are about to die’, and ‘Veda’ means ‘knows’. The verse says: “Which of these persons can know You?” The Personified Vedas say the Supreme Personality of Godhead was perfect in the beginning, and the others, who are all recently born, are not able to understand Him. The words ‘yata udagad rsih’ means ‘from You Brahma was born’. ‘Yam anu ubhaye’ means ‘After Brahma was born the demigods and other individual living entities were born.’ All these living entities are recently born. The Personified Vedas says: “When You take back (avakrsya) to the spiritual world the Vedas (sastran), which teach about You, when You also lie down (sayita), closing Your eyes to the activities of the material universe, then for the individual spirit souls who lie down with you there is no longer any way to understand You. At that time there are no gross material elements (sat) beginning with ether, no subtle material elements (asat) beginning with mahat-tattva, no material bodies made of gross and subtle material elements (ubhayam), and no force of time (kala-jvarah). In this way there are also no senses, no living force, and no other instruments of material life.” At the time of creation the Vedas reveal the truth of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, but the living entities, because they are recently born, born after the moment of creation, because they are bewildered by the presence of material bodies and various material designations, and because they are polluted by the power of time, cannot understand that revelation of the Supreme. The Vedas say: “At the time of cosmic devastation everything enters within You. At that time, because the Vedas have then disappeared, and because they are overcome with the sleep of ignorance, the living entities also cannot understand You.” This is described in the Sruti-sastra in these words: 5 “O Lord, when the living entities enter within You at the time of cosmic devastation they cannot understand anything about You.” Sruti-sastra “Words turn from the Supreme Personality of Godhead, for they cannot describe Him. With the material mind one can never attain Him.” Taittiriya Upanisad 2.4 “Who understands the Supreme? In this world who can describe Him?” Sruti-sastra “From what has everything come? Who has created this world? The demigods were recently born. Who knows from whence they have come?" Sruti-sastra 6 "Although fixed in His abode, the Personality of godhead is swifter than the mind and can overcome all others running. The powerful demigods cannot approach Him. Although in one place, He controls those who supply the air and rain. He surpasses all in excellence."* Isa Upanisad 8 "Neither the eyes, nor the ears, nor logic, nor memory, but only the Vedas can teach us about the Supreme Personality of Godhead." Sruti-sastra

1 That the ancient wise sages can directly understand and see the Supreme by serving Him with devotion will be described in three verses from Srimad Bhagavatam (9.8.21-23) quoted in this anuccheda. The first of these verses (Srimad Bhagavatam 9.8.21) says: “My Lord, even Lord Brahma is to this very day unable to understand Your position, which is far beyond himself, either by meditation or by mental speculation. So what to speak of others like us, who have been created by Brahma in various forms as demigods, animals, human beings, birds and beasts? We are completely in ignorance. Therefore, how can we know You, who are the Transcendence?”* 2 This verse states: “Even Lord Brahma (ajanah) is to the very day (adya) unable to see (na pasyati) You (tvam) or to understand (na budhyate) Your position (tvam).” Why can he not see or understand You? The answer is given in the word ‘samadhi-yuktibhih’, which means ‘You cannot be understood by meditation or mental speculation’. The word ‘apare’ means ‘How can others, who are only recently born, see or understand You?” Why are the others said to be recently born? The answer is given in the words ‘kuta pare tasya manah-sarira-dhi-visarga-srsta vayam aprakasah’, which means ‘So what to speak of others like us, whose mind, body, and intelligence have been created by Brahma from the material modes of goodness, passion, and ignorance, and made into in various forms as demigods, animals, and human beings? We are completely in ignorance, therefore, how can we see or know You, who are the Transcendence?” 3 Why can the others (apare) not see the Lord? The answer is given in the next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 9.8.22): “My Lord, You are fully situated in everyone’s heart, but the living entities, covered by the material body cannot see You, for they are influenced by the external energy, conducted by the three modes of material nature. Their intelligence being covered by sattva-guna, rajo-guna and tamo-guna, they can see only the actions and reactions of these three modes of material nature. Because of the actions and reactions of the mode of ignorance, whether the living entities are awake or sleeping, the can see only the workings of material nature, they cannot see You Lordship.”* 4 The verse says: ‘My Lord, You are fully situated in everyone’s heart, but the living entities, covered by the material body (ye deha-bhajah) cannot see You (na viduh). They see (vipasyanti) only the material modes of nature (gunan). Sometimes they see only the mode of ignorance. Their intelligence overpowered by the three modes, awake or dreaming they see only the material sense-objects. In dreamless sleep they see only the mode of ignorance. They do not see You, who are beyond the three modes of material nature. You are everywhere. Why do they no see You? Because their minds are bewildered by the illusory potency maya, or by Your illusory potency maya, they cannot understand You. Persons like us cannot understand You. Only Your devotees can understand You.” 5 The next verse (Srimad Bhagavatam 9.8.23) explains: “O my Lord, sages freed from the influence of the three modes of material nature - sages such as the four Kumaras (Sanat, Sanaka, Sanandana, and Sanatana) - are able to think of You, who are concentrated knowledge. But how can an ignorant person like me think of You?”* 6 This verse says: ‘My Lord, how can I think of You, who possess many wonderful transcendental potencies? What is Your form like? It is full of knowledge.” That the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is full of knowledge is described in the scriptures in these words: “The Visnu-murtis all had eternal, unlimited forms, full of knowledge, and bliss and existing beyond the influence of time.”* Srimad Bhagavatam 10.13.54 “The Lord’s form is spiritual and cannot be seen by the non devotees.” Sri Visnu-sahasra-nama-stotra The meaning is that because the Lord’s form is full of transcendental knowledge it cannot be understood by the materialists. The speaker of this verse therefore says: ‘I am a victim of the three modes of material nature. Therefore I am not able to think of You, O Lord.” 7 At this point the Supreme Lord may protest: “What is the proof that I am as you say?” The speaker of this verse answers: “The proof is that sages freed from the influence of the three modes of material nature - sages such as the four Kumaras (Sanat, Sanaka, Sanandana, and Sanatana) - are able to think of You. Indeed, they are able to see You directly. As owls have no conception of the sun, so some people cannot understand You. Recently born persons cannot understand You at all, although the wise devotees can see You directly. That is the meaning. The Sruti-sastra explains (Katha Upanisad 2.1.1): 8 “Generally speaking, no one can see the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is beyond the grasp of the material senses. However, one who is intelligent and saintly, and who aspires for liberation, can turn his eyes from matter and become able to see the Supreme Personality of Godhead residing within his heart as the Supersoul." 9 The method of seeing and understanding the Lord is described in these words of the Mathara-sruti: "Devotional service brings one to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Devotional service enables one to see the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Devotional service conquers the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Devotional service is more powerful than the Lord Himself." 10 The scriptures also explains (Katha Upanisad 1.2.23 and Mundaka Upanisad 3.2.3): "The Supreme Lord is not attained by expert explanations, by vast intelligence, or even by much hearing. He is obtained only by one whom He chooses. To such a person He manifests His own form."* 11 The verse quoted in the beginning of this anuccheda was spoken by Amsuman to Lord Kapiladeva. In this sandarbha, Brahman and the Supreme Personality of Godhead (Bhagavan) have been described.
